FARMINGTON'S TOAST TO ROCHESTER

(The Northwest Parish)
Following is the address given by E. H. Thomas, Farmington's representative, at the banquet in Rochester, Wednesday evening, on occasion of the 200th anniversary of that town

Originally, the territory now known as the town of Farmington was included in the township limits of Norway Plains, now Rochester, and under the old Puritan management the inhabitants of this territory were obliged to aid in the support of the "true" church at Norway Plains. This was considered unjust to be taxed to help support a church and parish from which, owing to the distance, very little benefit—spiritual or social—was derived. Strong objections were raised against the payment of these taxes, and on Dec. 1, 1798, after several futile attempts, this territory was incorporated as the town of Farmington. The population at that time was about 1000, a goodly number of whom lived on the Ten Rod road and at Merrill's corner. The new town was named by Gen. Richard Furber who lived at the latter place. He was a brave soldier in the Revolution serving as aid-de-camp at the surrender of Gen. Burgoyne, and retired at the close of the war a general. He died in 1848, aged 95 years, and is buried in the cemetery at Rochester, the remains having been removed from the homestead burial ground at Merrill's corner some years ago.

Farmington's first meeting house, which in those days served as a town house and meeting place for all public gatherings, was built near the center of the town about two and one-half miles below the village, on a high elevation. This spot ever since has been known as "Meeting-house hill."

The first church society was formed in 1819, when Rev. James Walker preached alternately in Milton and Farmington.

The first schoolhouse was built at Merrill's corner in 1791.

The village, or "dock" as it was called at that time, is in the northeast corner of the township on land formerly owned by John Ham. It acquired the name of the "dock" owing to the fact that in 1790 Jonas March came up from Portsmouth and opened a general store with a lumber yard just back of it. When teamsters came with lumber March would order them to unload on the dock, as it seemed the most natural thing in the world—having come from Portsmouth—to call his lumber yard a dock. It was not long before all the farmers and teamsters got the term and March's dock was known by everyone. After Mr. March left town it came to be known as "Farmington's dock." This stuck to the place for years and was frequently seen on old guideboards that were sprinkled through the town.

These are brief facts concerning the birth of the town. It is stated on good authority that the first white settler to locate on a blazed trail that ran from the Plains to New Durham was a man named Berry, in 1770, who built a log cabin on the site of the present Eastman house on South Main street, erected in 1813, and set his traps for furbearing animals up and down the banks of the Cochecho. Tradition has it that an Indian chief, head of a tribe that lived in this valley robbed Berry's traps, and that in a quarrel over some pelts, Berry killed the savage and that his bones lie buried near where the Berry cabin stood.

From the time of its incorporation as a town, Farmington progressed rapidly and the growth was a steady increase in population and wealth. In 1830 the village numbered 15 framed dwellings, five stores, one mill, a tavern, machine shop, and tannery. Elijah Badger was the pioneer shoe manufacturer. That was in the days of brogans, before machinery had become perfected, and when every farmer who wished could take "stock" home and make it up.

But the Civil war changed all this and with the new condition of things the farmers were obliged to come to the village if they were to continue shoemaking. Soon after the war closed, Farmington began to feel her importance as a manufacturing center; orders poured into the factories and goods made became greatly in demand, owing to the superior workmanship.

Manufacturers who have been and are, prominently identified with the town's growth, are: A. Nute & Sons, J. F. Cloutman, Sr. and Jr., G. A. Jones, I. Hayes & Son, H. B. Edgerly, F. E. Edgerly, J. B. Edgerly, J. M. Berry, Thayer-Osborne Shoe Co., Farmington Shoe Co., Haskell & Brown Shoe Co., F. I. Hayes Co., and the John Cotter Shoe Co., which recently has purchased the F. E. Edgerly shop. Other manufacturers are the Nutter Heel Co., F. W. Brown Wire Brush Co., G. F. Mooney & Son, wood handle makers; F. W. Coburn Knife Co., and B. F. Perkins, carriage maker.

The town has four churches, Congregational, organized September 15, 1819; Baptist church in 1854; Advent in 1869, and the Catholic in 1920.

The Farmington News, the local paper, was established in 1879 by James Fernald & Son.

The town has a National bank, a Savings bank, Building and Loan association, Board of Trade, and a Library association, the last mentioned established in 1853. The

The schools require 18 teachers. As to stores there are three dry goods, two drug, six grocery two clothing three confectionery one wholesale grocery two shoe stores, one jewelry, two millinery three hardware, besides several tobacco, billiard poolrooms and restaurants.

A fine water supply good fire protection, with two excellent companies, electric lights, six miles of concrete sidewalks and seven miles macadam roads.

The town has a total valuation of $2,100,635. It has furnished three U. S. Congressmen Nehemiah Eastman who served from 1825 to 1827 Dr. Hammond from 1827 to 1833 and Hon. Alonzo Nute from 1888 to 1890.

Eugene P. Nute recently deceased, had served as U. S. marshal for many years. He was a lifelong resident of Farmington and was highly respected by all.

It is a well known fact that Henry Wilson, vice president of the U. S. from 1873 to 1876, was a native of Farmington. A 12 ton boulder, suitably inscribed has been erected to his memory near his birthplace on South Main street.

Farmington has had its full share of misfortunes and business depressions. In 1876 a portion of the village was wiped out by fire and during the panic between 1890 and 1900 the factories were nearly all closed. In more recent years, two disastrous fires have occurred, first in 1910 when the Barker and Willson business blocks on Main street were destroyed, and in 1918 when the J. F. Cloutman shoe factory on South Main street was a total loss. This, however, has been replaced by a modern up-to-date building.

Farmington is a typical New England community, and nearly everyone has his, or her, own home. Many of the residences are very attractive and well kept.

The streets are adorned with beautiful shade trees. Edgerly park on North Main street, was donated by J. B. Edgerly, and is one of the beauty spots of the village. This is looked after by the local Woman's club.

Fernald park on Central street was given the town by Mrs. Elizabeth Fernald, Washburn of Ware, Mass., the only grandchild of the late Mr. and Mrs. James E. Fernald. This is used as a play and picnic ground.

In closing, I wish to say that the citizens of Farmington desire to convey most cordial greetings and warm congratulations to Rochester on this 200th anniversary, and to express the hope that the friendly relations that have existed in the past, may continue through the years to come.

The Boat of Life.
The little boat of our life labors in the trough of the sea, and we cannot see out at all. We are lifted to a wave-crest and look out, momentarily, over the troubled waters, happy if we can see, in the distance, the islands, with their fringed palms and mountains, whose summits lift to the blue dome of the sky. Again the trough of the sea engulfs us, and we cannot see. All I can offer is the vision from a single wave-crest: what the next may show, no one can foresee.—From "For What Do We Live," by Edward Howard Griggs.

One American Language.
When a "Pennsylvania Dutchman" is on his vacation, he is having his "off." When anything is finished, with those same folk, it is "all." So when said P. D. tells you his "off" is "all," you know his vacation has ended.—Farm Life.
