The man is considered the most reckless of men who risks his life by putting his head into the mouth of a savage iton. The men who perform this foolhardy act are few and far between.

There are tens of thousands of men who daily do a much more rash and dangerous deed. They are the men who overwork and neglect their health. No man can do this with impunity. Scribnèr's Magazine.

Colleges for women in this country are now old enough to have customs and traditions, and a distinct undergraduate life, after the manner of men's colleges. The first serious attempt to represent this life in magazine articles is begun in the May Scribner's with "Undergraduate Life at Wellesley," by Abbe Carter Goodloe. This article has nothing to do with scholastic ideals on the problems of higher education; it pictures the life as one who has lived it sees it. Miss Goodloe's skill as a writer was amply attested by the suc-cess of her "College Girls" stories. She exibits here humor and a keen appreciation of the social side of the life at Wellesley-particularly as it is lived by "the large majority who fake college sanely, and work when they work and play when it is time to play." Her picturesque account of "Float Day," "Tree Day," the "Barn Swallows," etc., is supplemented with series of brilliant illustrations by the Misses Cowles, Peixotto, Gilbert, and Rosenmeyer

HERE AND THERE.

The night of the ninth-of February, 1875, was marked by bitler cold and a high northwest wind, which lasted into high northwest wind, which lasted into steaple; clock, and clangerous bell, in and beyond the morning of the tenth of the midst of roaring flames. that short and sorry month. Not long after one o'clock on the latter date, it having been Wednesday morning, fire broke out in the ell part of the Elm House which had been built by the late Joseph Nutter and was conducted by his son, C. E. Nutter.

Alarm was sounded at once, and the alert members of the fire dedartment were followed speedily to Central street side districts, as the clamour continued to sound a need of all possible help.

The whole hotel, stables, and car-riage house, were filled with flame in ittle more time than one can speak of it, and very little of the contents of the buildings could be rescued.

The shoe factory east of the Elm House had been occupied in other years by the well known manufacturer John H. Hurd, now of Dover; by the firm of Berry and Kimbali; and by Charles W Thurston, who in 1871 had so improved the building that at the time of the fire it was an imposing structure four stories high, sccommodating the Haynes and Flanders last factory, the millinery and fancy goods store of Miss Augusta R. Thurston, and the Thurston shoe business of Mr.

In spite of the heroic work of the fire companies and their fellow citizens, the Thurston factory went down, and down, too, had to go the two story house and outbuildings with a black smith shop, occupied since the house was built in 1823, by Mr. Nathaniel B. Roberts, the father of Mrs John M. Berry.

Mr. John F. Chesley, like "Uncle Nat," had to see his two-story house in ruins, on the west side of the hotel, the dwelling having been so near to the latter that not even the strong northwest wind availed to augument suc-cessfully the attempts of the firemen to save it from destruction.

Between the Roberts place and the J. E. Fernald store there stood, and stands, a long narrow building known as the California House.

It was originally an annex of the Steamboat Hotel (Fernald and Whittier block) and was used as a dormitory for that once famous inn and stage station. It was owned by E L. Wedgewood, as

Had the old dormitory been burned near by; fortunately, through the most skilful management, the flumes in Central street were stayed in this quaint old building.

An excellent account of the fire, published in the Rochester Courier, in its Farmington edition, which was then our sole dependence as a local news sheet, says: "We do not believe in individual praise at a fire where all did the best they could, but, if we did, we should certainly mention the feat of Charles M. Armstrong, who went down through the roof of California House and as a pipesman drowned out that place."

The front of the building was occupied by our senior dealer in boots and shoes, Mr L. L Pinkham, and other parts of the house were utilized as tenements,

The C. H. Hayes dwelling house and the Fuller and Small store in the Small black, opposite the hotel and the Thurston factory, were scorched severely by the heat of the flames across the wide street, and caught fire several times, but the noble elms standing, between served as a screen, and suffered irreparable injury in their unconsciaus but efficient interposition.

brand upon the roof. Mr. Wingate was out upon the ridge-pole with a bucket of water, when the others called him to come away at once as the whole church was filled with flames. The three men named, Mr. Fernald and Dr. Cilley having been then hardly twenty-one years old, found it necessary to retreat hastily, but stiff with cold, their clothes a mass of ica, and their eyes blinded; by smoke, they could not trace the little stairway which led to their lofty but perilous position. Over and over they crept about, feeling for the opening in the floor, until they were almost overcome by heat and smoke, when a cry from one of them told the good news that he had a hand upon the trapway, and with careful movements, they made the descent to safety, not a moment; too, soon, agracing that never again would they be likely to have a more narrow escape from
