

I
Envoi

Go, little book, may you be read,
When skies are pleasant overhead,
Beneath some spreading tree;
And when the world is white with snow,
And smbers comfortably glow,
May you be company.

VII

To a friend

When summer skies are blue and fair
The stars, unseen, are shining there;
It is the darkness of the night
Alone, that brings them into sight

And thus it was, O friend of mine!
To make your hidden virtues shine,
The darkness of adversity
Came over you, and, now we see.

Re-stated

Dead Kings are words, dead heroes, memories.
The shackled serf that in a dungeon lies
Is quick with unknown possibilities.

And he is more unto himself than all
Who may have been, altho' he be in thrall,
For he may do, while they, can only call

With far off voices, that may pass him by.
The yearning, surging, palpitating I,
May crown a Cause, or turn an Age, away.

And yst the dead, dead Past we canonize
And toward the Future turn but careless eyes,
Albeit therein, our whole well-being lies.
