

Timothy Egan Lenahan

Architect, 34 9-9-92

Timothy Egan Lenahan, an architect who had practiced with Robert A. M. Stern, died yesterday at St. Vincent's Hospital and Medical Center in Manhattan. He was 34 years old and lived in Greenwich Village.

He died of complications from AIDS, his family said.

Mr. Lenahan was born in Bryn Mawr, Pa., and received bachelor's and master's degrees from Yale University. From 1984 to 1989, he worked for Mr. Stern on projects like the 222 Berkeley Street office tower in Boston, Kotel Israel Synagogue in Brooklyn and the Ohrstrom Library at St. Paul's School in Concord, N.H. Later, he practiced independently.

He is survived by his mother, Lois of Locust Valley, L.I., and three sisters, Elizabeth of Manhattan, Nancy Gourley of Bryn Mawr and Kathryn L. Perkins of Millerton, N.Y. His father, Edward F., who died four years ago, had been the publisher of Fortune magazine. 9-7-92

Juan A. Henares-Levy

Chief of Protocol, 49

Juan A. Henares-Levy, chief of protocol and conference services of the Inter-American Development Bank in Washington, died on Tuesday at his home in Washington. He was 49 years old.

The bank said he died from complications of AIDS.

A native of Puebla, Mexico, Mr. Henares earned degrees in law, journalism and public relations at Mexican institutions. He worked in the Office of the President of Mexico and subsequently managed public relations for the DuPont Corporation in Mexico before joining the bank in Washington in 1976.

Mr. Henares also wrote columns and articles on music for the Mexico City newspaper Excelsior.

He is survived by his two sisters, Dr. Lourdes Henares-Levy of St. Louis and Maria del Carmen Henares do Martinez Del Valle of Mexico City. His companion was Frank Addonizio of Washington. 6/30/92

Brian Lasser

Composer, 40

Brian Lasser, a composer and lyricist of Off Broadway shows and a director and musical arranger for cabaret acts, died on Friday at his home in Manhattan. He was 40 years old.

Mr. Lasser died of AIDS, said Karen Mason, a singer and his longtime partner.

Born in Chicago, Mr. Lasser attended the University of Illinois at Champaign-Urbana. He began his career in Chicago, came to New York City in the late 1970's and directed, arranged and wrote material for a wide variety of cabaret acts and Off Broadway musicals, including "Bundle of Nerves," "The No-Frills Revue" and his own musical, "The Black Tulip." Mr. Lasser also appeared in the 1986 Off Broadway drama "As Is."

He is survived by his parents, Isador and Helen Lasser, and two sisters, Margo and Helen, all of Chicago.

GREGG LIGHTBODY (7/11/56-5/1/90). Best buddy, I still miss your smile. You'll always be the best friend a girl could ever have. Love, Doreen.

Robert David LeSage

Former Maynard H.S. teacher

Robert David LeSage, of Jamaica Plain, died on October 22, 1991, the day before his 40th birthday. Born in Marlborough, Mass., Bob was a part-time mathematics teacher at Maynard High School for 17 years, and worked part-time at Marlborough Hospital for 20 years. He taught until his last hospitalization in October 1991.

Bob was proud to be the father of his three children and was always actively involved in their lives. He showed them and all who loved him how determination and commitment can yield a full and exciting life.

Bob died at Massachusetts General Hospital, three and one-half years after his diagnosis. He died in the presence of his lover, Peter Urban; his sister and brother, Linda and Chuck LeSage; his parents, Mary and Harold; and his friend Nat Butler.

Those who knew Bob will miss his energy, his engaging friendliness and his warmth.

Mass today on Beacon Hill for Rev. Karl Laubenstein, 41

GLOBE STAFF

A funeral Mass will be said at 11 a.m. today in the Church of St. John the Evangelist, Beacon Hill, for Rev. Karl N. Laubenstein, 41, an Episcopal priest and teacher of Spanish who died Thursday in Boston.

Rev. Laubenstein was diagnosed with AIDS in Holy Week 1987, and was soon after dismissed as interim rector of St. Matthew and the Redeemer Church in South Boston, an act he later told a reporter was due to the parish's "fear and unpreparedness" in dealing with his disease.

"More than anyone else I know, he modeled living with AIDS," said Rev. Suzanne R. Hiatt, one of his teachers at the Episcopal Divinity School in Cambridge. "His integrity stood out. He never yielded to any pressure to be apologetic about being a homosexual man or being ill or having AIDS."

Born in Boston, he grew up in Meredith, N.H. He graduated from the University of New Hampshire in 1970, earned a master's degree in Spanish from Boston University in 1973, and studied at the Universities of Valencia, Barcelona and Navarre in Spain and lived for a time in Peru.

He taught Spanish at Cape Cod Community College from 1972 to 1976 and entered the Episcopal Divinity School, where he received a master of divinity degree in 1980. While at the seminary, he taught Spanish at Concord Academy until 1984 and served as the school's assistant academic dean from 1980 to 1982.

In 1984, he moved to the Episcopal Diocese of Michigan as missionary to the Hispanic community. Ordained in 1985, he served as rector of Ascension Parish in Detroit before returning to the Boston area in January 1987.

While at the seminary, he also founded Casa Viva, a ministry to alcoholics in the Hispanic community in Mission Hill and the South End. At the time of his death he was assisting priest at St. John the Evangelist Parish, Boston.

He leaves his parents, Norvin C. and Dorothy (Landsdowne) of Meredith, N.H.; three brothers, John of Plainfield, N.J., Alan of Waltham and Mark of New Bedford; two sisters, Kristin Akinkugbe of London and Jane Follett of Lakeville; and his friend, Reed Woodhouse of Boston.

Edward M. Love Jr., Broadway Dancer, 43

Edward M. Love Jr., a Broadway dancer, choreographer and former member of the Alvin Ailey American Dance Theater, died on Dec. 27 at his home in Manhattan. He was 43 years old.

He died of AIDS, said his lawyer, Elliot J. Lefkowitz.

Mr. Love performed on Broadway in "Raisin," "The Wiz," "A Chorus Line" and "Dancin'." He was seen in the films "To Kill a Cop" and "A Piece of the Action." He did the choreography for the film "Hairspray."

Mr. Love choreographed, directed and performed in seven Off Broadway productions, and he choreographed industrial shows, commercials and revues that toured Europe. He created dances for music videos by Whitney Houston, Tina Turner, Kool and the Gang, Aretha Franklin and James Brown.

He is survived by two sisters, Sandra J. Aldridge of Detroit and Edwina L. Hardy of Toledo, Ohio. A memorial service is scheduled for Jan. 25 at 2 P.M. at St. Michael's Episcopal Church, Amsterdam Avenue and 99th Street, Manhattan.

... Dentist Robert Lay, 37, is 1st health care worker known to die of AIDS in city, officials said. Lay, who died Tuesday, stopped practicing in '87 when he was diagnosed with disease, The Knoxville Journal reported. July 30, '91

LIEBERMAN—Marc R. We salute our friend, who died August 8, 1992, at Stony Brook Hospital after a valiant struggle with AIDS. He will be missed.

Jay C. Lipner, 46, A Lawyer-Lobbyist For Victims of AIDS

By BRUCE LAMBERT

Jay C. Lipner, a lawyer who worked to expand AIDS patients' access to new drugs, insurance coverage and government assistance, died yesterday at his home in Manhattan. He was 46 years old.

He died of AIDS, his family said. Mr. Lipner played a major role in winning Social Security disability benefits for AIDS patients, lobbied Federal officials for wider access to experimental drugs, fought for better insurance coverage and worked for laws to prohibit discrimination.

"His contribution is almost inestimable," said Timothy Sweeney, executive director of the Gay Men's Health Crisis. "With his legal mind, he focused on very concrete needs at a broad policy level, the bread and butter issues that matter in staying alive."

Specialized in Nutrition Issues

Mr. Lipner was born in Corpus Christi, Tex., and received his undergraduate and law degrees from the University of Texas. He worked as a legal services lawyer for the poor in Arkansas, Rhode Island and New York, specializing in nutrition issues, and was a lawyer for the Food Research and Action Center in New York City and Washington.

He helped organize the Association of Community Organizations for Reform Now, or Acorn, which presses for housing and other local needs. As an assistant Attorney General in New York State, he helped litigate the Love Canal chemical waste case.

He became a partner in the Manhattan law firm of Silverstein Langer Lipner & Newburgh in 1984, and represented many AIDS patients.

After his first serious bout of illness in 1987, he invoked his disability benefits and devoted his remaining time to the cause of fighting AIDS.

He is survived by his mother, Miriam Lipner, and a sister, Julie Martin, both of Corpus Christi. His companion was John Dmicelli of New York City. 11/7/91

Interment Temple B'nai Abraham Memorial Park, Union, NJ. For information: Menorah Chapels at Millburn, 2950 Vaux Hall Road, Union, NJ. In lieu of flowers contributions may be made to GMHC, 129 West 20th Street, NYC 10011 or Dr. Fred Valentine, c/o AIDS Research, NYU Medical Center, 530 First Avenue, N.Y.C. 10016.

LEVENTHAL—James M. On August 22, this vibrant, witty, loving man passed away after bravely facing AIDS related lymphoma. Born in Trenton, NJ and a graduate of Temple University, he made his home in New York City where he was Director of International Sales for Tommy Boy Records. Among his many talents was a thirst for learning and a fluency in languages. He is survived by his life partner Joel Armstrong, his mother and stepfather Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Glickman, of Trenton, NJ and his sister Mrs. Leonard Laster of Woods Hole, Mass. He will be deeply missed but his passion for life will continue to be an inspiration to his many friends both here and abroad. There will be a private funeral service in Trenton. A Memorial Service in Manhattan will be announced at a later date. In lieu of flowers, donations in Jim's name may be made to God's Love We Deliver, 895 Amsterdam Ave., NY, NY 10025.

LEGATO—Augustus T., M.D., on January 4, 1992. Loving companion of Alan J. Simon, son of Evelyn G. Legato of Grosse Pointe, Michigan and the late Joseph H. Legato, brother of Bonnie Lucido and Bart Legato of Grosse Pointe, Michigan. Friends may call Tuesday 5-9 P.M. at Frank E. Campbell, 1076 Madison Avenue at 81 St. Service Wednesday, 2:30 P.M.

LICIAGA—Luis R. A career civil servant for the City of New York. Died the morning of September 9 at his home in Manhattan at the age of fifty. He died of complications due to AIDS. Mr. Liciaga was for over 25 years a senior analyst and advisor in the offices of Comptroller Harrison Golden and Manhattan Borough President David Dinkins. His extensive knowledge of city government operations led him to become a special advisor to the NYC Charter Revision Commission, reorganizing city government. Working under Richard Ravitch, he was highly regarded for his skills in resolving disputes among city agencies, providing policy guidance during negotiations and for his honesty and integrity in working with hundreds of community organizations and elected officials. Mr. Liciaga was born in San Juan, Puerto Rico on February 7, 1941. He received his B.A. degree in 1962 from the University of Puerto Rico in theatre production and fine arts. He was an accomplished dancer for many years, performing with several well-known Spanish dance and flamenco companies throughout the world. An active member of the Gay Rights movement, he was instrumental in developing support for the passage of city gay rights legislation. Mr. Liciaga is survived by his life companion Mark Gilbert and his mother Mrs. Maria Teresa Liciaga Guilbot. In lieu of flowers, the family requests that donations be made to Gay Men's Health Crisis (GMHC) and Lambda Legal Defense and Education Fund (LLDEF).

LACATTUTA—Michael J. On October 25, 1992. Age 34 years. Of AIDS. Executive chef and co-owner, The Monster Restaurant, Fire Island, N.Y. Beloved son of John J. and Eileen (nee McConnell), loving brother of Patricia, Paul, and the late Jack. Resting at Mangano Funeral Home, Inc., 1701 Deer Park Ave., Deer Park, L.I. Funeral Mass Wednesday 10:30 am, St. Matthew's R.C. Church, Dix Hills. Private cremation to follow.

Reflections

The Never-Ending Quilt Story

by Martin M. Boucher

I sit at my typewriter, preparing to write how I feel, eight months after seeing the AIDS Memorial Quilt in Washington, D.C. on October 6, 1989. This is my way of remembering and honoring my dear friend, Christopher Lambert, who has since passed on. His undying love for life and hope for the future stay with me. Goodbye, dear friend. I will see you when my time here is over but now I have this story to tell.

In Washington, Christopher wanted to spend the entire day viewing the "never-ending Quilt". He had a wheelchair and I had a cane. The AIDS Memorial Quilt was to be displayed all weekend. Pushing my friend around the maze of the quilt, stopping at each panel so he could reflect, seeing old friends, and taking pictures, I had a humorous sense of being Bette Davis in "What Ever Happened to Baby Jane?" I'm not saying that my friend and I were like those great movie stars but sometimes he could be trying and he could bust my bubble. I told him so several times and Christopher would laugh and say, "If you don't like it, Mona, you can always hire me a nurse on roller skates." We would chuckle and then he'd get serious and we'd be off to the next panel. Sometimes Christopher would forget that I was even there and would go off on his own, camera focused. I started to have feelings of my own loneliness.

I found my way to the center of the quilt where a signature square was located for those who cared to add a name or other remembrance. At first, I didn't think that I knew anyone who had died, so I wrote in "No More Death — Find a Cure...Now!!! Rest in Final Peace...Marty. October 6, 1989." Then Christopher and I met and we continued our journey together. Thirty minutes later, I found myself staring at a panel honoring my ex-lover five years ago.

Then the sadness hit me with full force. Tears streamed down my face as I fell to my knees and touched Bob's photo that was sewn to his panel along with a collage of his personal belongings, other photos, letters, signatures of family members, loved ones, and friends. There was a button that I'd given him when we were young and in love. It read simply, "LOVE FOR LIFE!!!" At this point, I lost it. I didn't even know he was ill, let alone dead! I was alone, crying, but not really alone. Around me, people were crying, laughing, touching, feeling the overwhelming emotions stirred by the Quilt. The President of the United States flew directly overhead, safely inside his private helicopter, getting ready to have surgery on his finger. I'm sure he didn't see us.

I needed to be alone. But the Quilt followed me to my hotel room. In my mind, I saw the button and Bob's face over and over again. Happy and unhappy memories flooded the room. I was living in Worcester with Bob when news of AIDS began to spread and the then labeled "Homosexual Transmitted Killer Epidemic" hit the major cities. We had always been careful but I know now we weren't as well protected as we'd thought. We eventually went our separate ways. He joined the Navy and I went back to my home town and Cape Cod. I never heard from Bob again.

I want everyone to remember the good times and not dwell on the sad or unhappy times... I want dear friends and loved ones to know that they have all made an impact on my life.

I've had this dread disease for two years with only minor setbacks and treatments. Christopher tried every treatment and study available to him without promises of success or pleasant results. He took himself off all medication and drug trials exactly as he'd planned. I could never be as brave or as stubborn as he was. What kind of courage does it take to realize that you aren't going to get better when your doctor informs you that the treatments and clinical trials are toxic to your system? I hope I never have to go through what Christopher went through. I would probably do exactly what he did and try to enjoy the rest of my life.

At the candlelight March Against AIDS at the Ellipse, the October nighttime air hung heavily over the thousands of people who gathered for speeches, singing and remembrance.

The view was magical — a million illuminated fireflies radiated over the memorial of our late, great President, Abe Lincoln. If there is truly a God, he heard our cries and saw our suffering that night.

It felt wonderful watching other people. I ran into old friends from Boston and met some new friends. I thought about the past once more — the nameless faces at the bars where I'd been employed, the year and a half I'd spent with Bobby, the sailor, the day I was diagnosed with AIDS after being hospitalized with PCP, the day I became homeless, looking for help through the AIDS ACTION Committee in Boston — to that present evening in Washington, D.C.

John Livingston, 60 Educator, Humanitarian, Friend

John Livingston of San Francisco died suddenly, Saturday, June 17th in Pacifica, California at the age of 60.

Born in San Francisco, John was a long time South End resident. Having graduated a Fulbright Scholar from Stamford in 1949, he served in the Newton Public Schools for 26 years where he recently retired to return to the West Coast.

John embraced life with a warmth and energy that characterized his full heart. His life long interests in education, literature, politics, theater and the Arts brought him closer to his work, his community and to us. Always cultivating a strong interest in cultures both here and abroad, John traveled extensively escorting students on tour, collecting rarities, forming people. His dedication to the pursuit of knowledge and experience brought him not only personal satisfaction, but the gift of relating his discoveries to others. The graces of John's creativity, humor and sincerity will remain with those of us who knew him, who loved him.

In addition to a wide circle of friends, John is survived by his sister Ann Livingston Ingram of Washington, D.C. and three children; Marcus Livingston of San Francisco; Erica Livingston of Wilton, Conn. and Betsy Kelleher of Boston.

The family requests that any

contributions be made to: Partner of Conscience, Amnesty International U.S.A., Box 37037, Washington, D.C. 20013, or, Friends of the San Francisco Hospice, P.O. Box 7999, San Francisco, CA 94120

A memorial service will be held at Emmanuel Church, 15 Newbury Street, in the Lindsey Chapel at 8:00 p.m., Thursday, July 6. □

Scott Lago

Co-founder of NAMES Project 1991

Scott Lago, one of the founding members of the NAMES Project, and organizer of hundreds of displays of the AIDS Memorial Quilt, died July 30 of AIDS. He was 31.

Raised in Athens, Georgia, Scott graduated from the University of Georgia in 1981 with a degree in broadcast journalism. After graduation, he worked in the news department of the NBC television affiliate in Savannah, Georgia. In 1985, he moved to San Francisco and worked for Neiman-Marcus.

Scott was one of the founding NAMES Project volunteers, helping to establish the Project in June, 1987. He helped organize the Quilt's earliest displays, including the first San Francisco showing in the windows of Neiman-Marcus, and the inaugural Washington, D.C. display. His many contributions during this early stage of the project have evolved into lasting traditions that visitors to the Quilt can still see today.

In 1988, Scott was hired as a tour manager and traveled across the country, organizing Quilt displays in the 19 largest cities, including Boston. His passionate work, and his vivid eloquence, helped thousands of people all across the country see the Quilt, share their loss, and understand the effects of the epidemic. In October of that year, he was featured on ABC News' Nightline.

In 1989, he organized a second cross-country tour of the Quilt, and also brought the Quilt to several Canadian cities. He continued working with the Project and organizing displays, including several in conjunction with "A Day Without Art", until June of this year.

He is survived by his parents, Merrill and Robert, of Athens, GA; his sister Lenise, of Montana; his brother Cully, of South Carolina; and friends all across the country. Services will be held in Athens and San Francisco.

Donations in Scott's name can be made to the NAMES Project Foundation, 2362 Market Street, San Francisco, CA 94114, where a special display fund has been established in his honor.

Donald Lorimer, 46, An AIDS Researcher

Donald Lorimer, who worked in several agencies combating AIDS and became a specialist in the epidemic's demographic trends, died on Wednesday at his home in Manhattan. He was 46 years old.

His companion, Charles Bolds, said he died of AIDS.

Mr. Lorimer was among the early researchers to analyze AIDS statistics to show major differences in infection rates by age, race, sex, neighborhood and drug-abuse patterns.

The AIDS maps, charts and profiles that emerged showed which groups and areas most needed medical and social services and programs to prevent the disease from spreading further. The variations were often startling. He calculated that in a part of the Lower East Side racked by poverty and drugs, one of every 12 men was infected with H.I.V., while a few blocks away in a predominantly Asian section, the rate was only one in 273.

Since 1989 Mr. Lorimer was the director of special projects for the Health Systems Agency of New York City. For several years he was the AIDS service coordinator for the Lower East Side. He was also on the original staff of the Office of Gay and Lesbian Health Concerns created by Mayor Edward I. Koch to help deal with AIDS and had been a coordinator of the city's AIDS hotline.

He served on the board of Body Positive, an organization for people infected with H.I.V. He also pressed for AIDS services as a member of Community Board 3 in Manhattan.

Surviving are his father, Robert L. Lorimer of Edina, Minn.; a brother, Lawrence T. of Manhattan, and two sisters in California.

Thomas Lasorda Jr., manager's son

SANTA MONICA, Calif. — The 33-year-old son of Los Angeles Dodgers manager Tommy Lasorda died yesterday of pneumonia.

Thomas C. Lasorda Jr. died at his home, said Lee Solters, spokesman for the family. His father, mother and sister were at his side when he died, said Solters.

Born in Greenville, S.C., on May 6, 1958, the younger Mr. Lasorda was an artist who never married. He had been ill for about five weeks and was hospitalized briefly at Cedars-Sinai Medical Center.

Dr. Allen Metzger, who had been treating Mr. Lasorda, said he died of pneumonia and severe dehydration. "There is no other cause that I can report," Metzger said.

Mr. Lasorda leaves his father, mother, Jo, and sister, Laura. 6/4/91 —AP

Franklin R. Levy, 43, Film and TV Producer

3-19-92

SOUTHINGTON, Conn., March 19 (AP) — Franklin R. Levy, a theater, film and television producer whose credits include the features "My Stepmother Is an Alien" and "Night-hawks," died on Tuesday at Bradley Memorial Hospital here. He was 43 years old and had a brain hemorrhage on Aug. 16.

He died of a pulmonary embolism, said his Los Angeles press agent, Flo Selfman.

Mr. Levy was a consultant to the Center Theater Group at the Ahmanson Theater in Los Angeles, and he co-founded the Production Company in 1977. It produced several stage works and the television films "Enola Gay" and "The Child Stealer."

He also co-founded Catalina Production Group Ltd., which produced the NBC-TV film "For Ladies Only" and "The Hasty Heart" for the stage. His theater credits include "Journey's End," "Child's Play" and "A Lovely Way to Spend an Evening."

He had begun work on a feature remake of "The Incredible Journey" for Disney Studios when he became ill, Ms. Selfman said.

Mr. Levy's companion was Bill Hut-ton.

He is survived by his parents, Leo and Gloria Levy of the Bronx, and three brothers: Larry D. of New Hyde Park, N.Y.; Scott D. of Manhasset, L.I., and Steven C. of Roslyn Heights, L.I.

Kenneth W. LaMond 1991 Photographer, Filmmaker, Projectionist

South End resident Kenneth Wilshire LaMond, 42, died at home peacefully on Sunday, April 7, of AIDS-related lymphoma. His life partner of six years, Michael McDade, was at his side.

The only son of the late Kenneth Roderick LaMond and Leona Bowen, Ken was born and lived in Arlington/Vienna, Virginia during his early childhood prior to relocating to Maine at age six, and subsequently to Connecticut. He graduated from high school in Coventry, CT in 1966, and from the Germaine School of Photography in New York City where he studied still photography under Richard Avedon, as well as cinematography under Joseph V. Mascelli, A.S.C.

A veteran of the U.S. Army Signal Corps, Ken received motion picture production training at Astoria Station, Queens, NY (now the home of the American Museum of the Moving Image) and he worked as a script clerk and a sound recordist on several U.S. Army training films. Additionally, he served as an audio-visual specialist at Eighth Army Headquarters in Seoul, Korea, while in the military.

Active in the gay movement in Boston from the mid-1970s, Ken photographically documented an era. He was the photographer for the first series of Buddies' Men portraits in 1981, and his work was featured regularly in such gay publications as After Hours, Hit Parade and Limelight.

In the 1980s, Ken directed his attention first to multi-media productions, and most recently, to animated graphics, special visual effects and optical printing. He supplemented his artistic endeavors by working as a motion picture projectionist at various cinemas, including seven fond years at the Coolidge Corner Theater.

Ken was first diagnosed with AIDS in May, 1987; he forthrightly dealt with the many challenges and the changing circumstances precipitated by AIDS. He participated in the Phase One Clinical Trial of Peptide-T at the Fenway Community Health Center and he projected a series of films at the Boston Living Center in early 1990.

In addition to his life partner, Ken is survived by four sisters. A memorial service will be held on Sunday, June 2, at 11:00 a.m. at the Coolidge Corner Theater, 290 Harvard St., Brookline.

Donations in Ken's memory may be made to the Kenneth W. LaMond Memorial Fund, in care of Judith Flewelling, 30 Littell Rd., Brookline, MA 02146, or to the charity of your choice.

Whose passing leaves a Void in the Lives of those who Loved Him.

Larry Labarge

Larry Labarge, a resident of Dorchester, passed away August 20 at Beth Israel Hospital, from complications due to AIDS.

Larry was born September 9, 1950 in Bennington, Vermont. He grew up there, and graduated from the University of Vermont with a degree in business. He worked in theaters throughout New England, and spent the last ten years working for National Amusements-Showcase Cinemas. An executive in charge of production, he worked out of the home office in Dedham.

Larry had many passions, one of which was player pianos. He owned two and collected hundreds of piano rolls. He loved flea markets and could never pass one without stopping. Larry was a warm and giving man, always there when a friend needed a hand, an ear, or was in a bind and needed help; he never asked for anything in return.

Larry is survived by his lover Jim King of Cambridge, his mother Bulah Labarge of Bennington, his twin sister Linda and her family, two brothers, in Vermont and British Columbia, and many friends. He lives in the light of total love. He is greatly missed, always remembered, and most important, always loved.

WHEN Beverly Rotter's daughter, Iris De La Cruz, died from complications with AIDS in 1991, Ms. Rotter and Iris's daughter, Melissa, wanted to commemorate her with a panel in the AIDS memorial quilt. But Ms. Rotter, a restaurant manager who lives in Sheephead Bay, Brooklyn, didn't know how.

Through the People With Aids Coalition in Manhattan, Ms. Rotter was put in touch last spring with Bob Wilson, one of 10 volunteers with Metro New York Quilters, who have made panels for the quilt since 1988.

From Oct. 9 through 11, the quilt will be on display in Washington, and it will have a panel for Ms. De La Cruz, who was an advocate and educator in the AIDS cause.

"Twenty-five of us mothers are going, and each one will have the panels finished because of Bob Wilson," Ms. Rotter said. In all, Metro New York Quilters has helped make 500 of the 25,000 3-by-6-foot panels now contained in the AIDS quilt, which was begun by the Names Project Foundation in 1987.

Making the panel is "like making a

Mark Lingley

Mark Lingley, a lifelong resident of Lexington, died February 20. Mark was born July 11, 1960, the son of Ralph and Eleanor and brother of Susan, Gail, John and Michael.

Mark, you went on before us, leaving a timeless legacy that few men have.

Your presence never went unnoticed. In thirty years your impact left a permanent impression on all who met you.

Your mischievous eyes and coy smile forewarned all that no opportunity would be missed for the perfect prank or "go for broke" antic.

Your uninhibited approach to eliminate the mundane masked the underlying sensitivity that brought you quietly to the side of anyone in need of support or reassur-

When our thoughts turn to you, the sadness we feel will quickly be replaced by a smile. The name Mark Lingley will always be synonymous with laughter and compassion.

Through you, our friend, we will look at many things a little differently. Most importantly we will take ourselves a little less seriously.

Thanks for the wonderful times, the loyal friendship, and thanks for being an important part of our lives.

A memorial in Mark's name has been established at the Fenway Community Health Center. Contributions may be sent to the FCHC, c/o Cindy Rizzo, 15 Haviland Street, Boston, MA 02115

Kenneth M. Leet

Longtime Fenway area resident

Kenneth M. Leet, longtime resident of the Fenway area of Boston, formerly of Ipswich, died on Tuesday, September 25, 1990. He died in the company of friends at the Hospice at Mission Hill of AIDS-related complications. He was 65 years old.

Born in Ipswich on November 10, 1924, son of Minnie E. (Spencer) and the late Clarence M. Leet, he was educated in the Ipswich public schools, where he graduated in 1942.

Entering the Army in 1943, he served two enlistments as a military policeman in the European Theater.

Following the war, he worked for an insurance company in New York City and later returned to Boston where he worked for ten years as office manager for Lee Tire and Rubber Company. He then worked for the Hobart Manufacturing Company for 25 years, retiring in 1987.

Besides his mother, he is survived by two brothers, Charles R. and Donald F., both of Ipswich; and close friends Peggy and Bobby Carmody of Brighton; Tyrone Cobb of Watertown; and Eddy Whitman of Boston.

Ken's sharp wit, sense of humor, and kindness to those in need will be missed by those whose lives he touched.

Memorial contributions may be made to the Hospice at Mission Hill, 20 Parker Hill Avenue, Boston, 02120

Father Sues to Expunge AIDS Reference from Son's Tombstone

GLENDALE, Calif. (Sept. 24 GayNet) — Alexander Lawrence, the father of Los Angeles gay activist George Lawrence, who died of an AIDS-related illness last year at the age of 41, has petitioned the Superior Court here to force Forest Lawn Memorial Park to change the headstone on his son's grave to remove a reference to AIDS. Lawrence's headstone reads, "AIDS is a hard disease to die from, but I rejoice in knowing that my friends will carry on against AIDS and gay oppression." His father's suit, required because cemeteries refuse to alter gravesites without a court order, asks the court to order the change as part of his right to privacy. Friends of the dead activist are outraged at the father's suit and the attempt to eliminate the reference to the cause of his son's death in defiance of the dead man's wishes. 1992 living bees. He once organized a team of 26 who "used the hallways, put help boards over my bed, had tables in the living room, and two of the neighbors let me use their apartments," he said.

Mr. Wilson explained the process of working with friends and families. The group does not charge a fee. "If we try to talk them into doing their own quilts or panels, or to come here fine," Mr. Wilson said. "If they can't to my apartment and we'll work with them," he said. His one-bedroom apartment in Greenwich Village ishas AIDS, tries to accommodate people with bolts of fabric, skeins of yarn and spools of thread stacked on the floor to ceiling, and each day he gets up at 7 A.M. to sew, meet with people and give talks at schools and colleges. Since his debut at 16 as a soloist with the Philadelphia Orchestra, Mr. Lorango had appeared with many orchestras around the country, including the Dallas Symphony, the St. Louis Symphony and the Buffalo Philharmonic. A frequent recitalist, he appeared at Alice Tully Hall, the Library of Congress and other halls in the United States and in Europe. He was a participant in the Marlboro Music Festival in Vermont and often toured with Music From Marlboro.

In addition to his wife, he is survived by his parents, Vincent and Mary Lorango of North Tonawanda, and a brother, Tony, of Torrance, Calif.

Dying boy's wish gets mom a house

Jammie Lewis' wish was one shared by thousands of people — having a nice home for his family to live in.

It was a simple enough desire complicated by several factors. Lewis, 16, is dying from AIDS contracted from blood transfusions he received to treat his hemophilia.

Last August, the same virus killed his 13-year-old brother, Shannon Larose, also a hemophiliac. His mother, Bette Lewis, works round-the-clock caring for Jammie while raising another son, Brannon Larose, 8, a hemophiliac, and a daughter, Shilo Lewis, 3, in a small apartment.

Jammie Lewis asked the Make-A-Wish Foundation of Greater Boston to make his wish come true. It took 18 months, with help from public and private donations, to fulfill the selfless wish Jammie made "cause I love my family."

"I have never been so happy in my life, except when I had my kids," Bette Lewis said through tears while standing in her new kitchen. "So many people have shown a kind heart and I didn't think that was around anymore."

The spacious townhouse at 608 Steven St., Unit C, in the Highlands section of Lowell has two bedrooms, a loft, 1½ bathrooms and an eat-in kitchen.

Two years ago, both Jammie and Shannon were diagnosed with AIDS. The Make-A-Wish Foundation granted Shannon's wish to visit Disneyland. Jammie's desire for a house, however, was the biggest project the local chapter has ever attempted.

"It was incredibly frustrating," said Beth Edick, a volunteer who worked steadily to grant Jammie's wish. "Everyone was sympathetic to our plea but no one could really do anything about it."

About two weeks ago, after 18 months of asking for contributions and staging fund-raising events, Make-A-Wish volunteers gave up and tried to convince Jammie to make another, more attainable wish.

Only after Edick approached William McDevitt, affordable housing coordinator with the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. in Westboro, did the process begin again.

A house that had been foreclosed on was found and red tape was cut to get the family into it.

"We are expediting this because of the nature of the child's illness," McDevitt said. The house was purchased for an undisclosed price, but Dan Sheedy, Make-A-Wish chapter president, said it cost the chapter just a little more than the average cost of granting a wish — $3,000. The rest came from local businesses that chose to remain anonymous.

This is the first and last time the chapter will buy a house to fulfill a wish, Sheedy said. The organization took on the project of granting Jammie's "unselfish gift," but because of time and cost considerations, it can't do it again. □

Jammie's request to the Make-A Wish Foundation of Greater Boston resulted in his mother being given the two-bedroom townhouse in the background. Charles Lancaster

Charles "Chasz" Hubert Lancaster, 42, of Washington, D.C., died on Saturday, February 20, 1993, at Prince George's Community Hospital of complications associated with AIDS, according to his sister, Sharon Beckham of Mitchellville, Md.

Lancaster was born and raised in D.C. He served in the United States Navy, where he was a drum major in the Naval Band. He became the entertainment director for the Spirit of Miami, an entertainment cruise ship, in Miami, Fla., after leaving the Navy.

In January of 1987 Lancaster joined the political consulting firm of Greer, Margolis, Mitchell and Associates as a video producer. His career in public relations and advertising included work with the campaigns of Virginia Gov. Douglas Wilder and President Bill Clinton, as well as with the National Child Immunization Campaign.

Lancaster was a pianist and organist who, according to Beckham, recognized and pursued his talent from an early age. While in high school, he received piano instruction from a music teacher who was married to the commanding officer of the U.S. Naval Band. More recently, he volunteered his time and skills to several area churches including the First Baptist Church of Fairmont Heights, the Tabernacle Baptist Church, and the Mount Ephraim Baptist Church.

In addition to Beckham, Lancaster is survived by his parents, Charles and Gloria Lancaster of D.C.; two sisters, Gloria Lancaster, also of D.C.; and Marian Johnson of Aberdeen, Md.; nieces, Kimberly Robinson of D.C.; Coney Beckham of Mitchellville; and Irma and April Johnson of Aberdeen; nephew Craig Bentley of D.C.; a "unifamily of friends" from D.C. and Philadelphia, Pa.; a dog, Magnum; and Fred F.L. Watkins.

The family will receive friends Friday, Feb. 26, from 6-9 p.m., at Mount Ephraim Baptist Church, 610 Largo Rd. Largo, Md. Lancaster's memorial service will be held on Saturday, Feb. 27, at a.m., at Mount Ephraim Baptist Church.

In lieu of flowers, donations in Lancaster's name may be made to the Whitman-Walker Clinic, 1407 S Street, NW, Washington, DC 20009.

Raymond Eugene Lanhart

Nov. 17, 1946 - Feb. 7, 1993

After a long and valiant struggle with AIDS, Raymond peacefully ended his journey in this life on a rainy Sunday afternoon. Fiercely independent to the very end, Raymond was able to remain at home with his beloved cat Norton, aided by the support group that he set up himself to assist him with his transition.

Raymond spent his early years in Ohio. He served honorably in the U.S. Army from 1966-1969. He lived in New York City for eight years, where he was honored to be present at Stonewall. He moved to San Francisco in the late '70s, where he found stability in his employment with the Federal Reserve Bank for 13 years.

During the last four years of his life, Raymond was a member of the NA and AA programs, where he found the peace of mind that had eluded him for so long. He was actively involved with Project Inform, SPCA and the Dolores Street Baptist Church.

He will be deeply missed by his Ohio family and the members of his support group, Barbara, Bob, Dottie, Elaine, and Marilyn.

A celebration of Raymond's life will take place on February 20, 1993 at 1 p.m. at the Dolores Street Baptist Church, 15th and Dolores, San Francisco. Donations may be made to any of the local AIDS charities. ▼

David Langer, 42,

Partner in Law Firm
C-5-93

David Langer, a partner in a Manhattan law firm and a civic leader, died on Saturday at St. Vincent's Hospital and Medical Center in Manhattan. He was 42 and lived in Manhattan.

The cause was brain cancer, his family said.

Mr. Langer was a co-founder of the Silverstein Langer Lipner & Newburgh firm, where he specialized in trusts, estates and real estate.

He served as the chairman of Senior Action in a Gay Environment, an organization for elderly homosexuals. He also served as treasurer of the Fire Island Pines Property Owners Association and as chairman of the Fire Island Pines Zoning Advisory Committee.

Mr. Langer was born in White Plains. He was a graduate of the University of Massachusetts and the Benjamin Cardozo School of Law.

His survivors include his companion of 15 years, Fred Weber; his parents, Jerome and Joanne Langer of Paxton, Mass.; his birth mother, Louise Raybin of Ossining, N.Y.; two sisters, Sally Langer of Manhattan and Joy Langer of Worcester, Mass., and two brothers, Marc Raybin of Croton, N.Y., and Jack Raybin of Ossining.

HILTON LOVER My soul still cries for you when I least expect it. Sorry for the call. Wish we could meet now - it would have been different. 4-10-96

DOTTIE LOGAN 35
12-19-92

Venus Landin, 31, a well-known Atlanta Gay activist who served as cochair of the city's African American Lesbian and Gay Alliance, was shot to death March 2 in Atlanta (Southern Voice).

Lonnie Lappie, 39, a St. Louis, Mo., athlete who won gold in bodybuilding at the Gay Games II in San Francisco, died Feb. 25 of AIDS complications. Place of death was not reported (St. Louis Lesbian and Gay News-Telegraph).

Martin P. Levine, 42, A Sociologist, Is Dead

Martin P. Levine, a sociologist and educator who specialized in research on homosexuality and AIDS, died on Saturday at his home in Manhattan. He was 42.

The cause was AIDS, his family said. Dr. Levine founded the Lesbian and Gay Caucus of the American Sociological Association and was its first chairman. At his death he was on sick leave from the faculty of Florida Atlantic University. From 1978 to 1990 he was an associate professor at Bloomfield College.

He wrote or edited many articles and books on sexuality and AIDS, including "Gay Men: The Sociology of Male Homosexuality" (Harper and Row, 1976).

He was a researcher at Memorial Sloan-Kettering Cancer Center in Manhattan, directing a study financed by the National Institute of Mental Health on decisions about sexual activity among gay men in the AIDS epidemic.

He also served on a National Academy of Sciences panel monitoring the social effects of the disease and developed one of the first college courses about AIDS.

He was born in Brooklyn. After graduating from the State University of New York at Binghamton, he earned a master's degree and doctorate at New York University.

His survivors include his parents, Herman and Annette, of Brooklyn; two sisters, Jacqueline Proulx of Brooklyn and Hope Schuering of Middletown, N.Y., who was his twin, and a brother, Steven, of New City, N.Y.

Andrew F. Leo, 44

Design director in Chicago

Andrew F. Leo, director of design at the Chicago Historical Society, died March 9 in his Chicago home of complications from AIDS. He was 44.

Born and raised in California, Mr. Leo studied with the Boston Architects Collaborative in the early 1970s before moving to Chicago. As a draftsman and later with the Historical Society, he helped renovate several Chicago landmarks, including the Monadnock Building.

Before his illness forced him to retire, he was working on a 100th anniversary exhibition to commemorate the Chicago World's Fair of 1893. That show and an accompanying book will be dedicated to his memory.

He leaves three sisters, Nancy Balow, Judy Presnol and Debra Corrigan, all of California.

Shayne Ladner

Shayne Michael Ladner, 35, of Washington, D.C. died on Friday, March 12, 1993 at the Washington Hospice of complications associated with AIDS.

According to a friend, Jan Schoonmaker of Washington, D.C., Ladner graduated from Centenary College in Shreveport, La. with a bachelor's in political science and history and attended graduate studies at Louisiana State University. Following this, he was involved in petroleum exploration in northern Louisiana and Texas. He then became a government affairs representative for the Shreveport Chamber of Commerce, where he remained for several years, until moving to Los Angeles, Calif. and becoming an account executive with the public relations firm of Hill and Knowlton. In 1987 Ladner moved to Washington, D.C. where he was a legislative affairs specialist with the law firm of Verner, Lipfert, Bernard, McPherson and Hand. In 1990, he left the law firm for a post as a government affairs representative for the Independent Insurance Agents of America. From 1990-1991 he also served as a staff planner for the National Lesbian and Gay Health Foundation.

In addition, Ladner was involved in political and community affairs. He was an alternate delegate to the 1980 Democratic National Convention and served on the board of directors of the Centenary College Alumni Association. In 1990 he cochaired the annual Washington Human Rights Campaign Fund Dinner and was a member of Jack Evans's campaign staff in Evans's successful race for the D.C. Council.

Besides his community activities, Ladner's interests included travel and history. He had taken trips to London, France, and Italy, as well as ski trips in the United States.

In addition to Schoonmaker, Ladner is survived by his parents, Katy and Wayne Ladner of Lake of the Pines, Tex.; and many friends.

A memorial service will be held on Saturday, April 3, at 1:30 p.m., at All Soul's Memorial Church, Cathedral and Connecticut Avenues, NW. Ladner's remains will be interred in Shreveport, La.

In lieu of flowers, contributions may be made to the Shayne M. Ladner Scholarship Fund, Centenary College, Shreveport, LA 71104.

8-43 • Gertrude "Missy" LeClair, 41, an HIV educator, co-founder of Living Strategies Inc., and a consultant to both federal and private agencies, has died of complications related to the disease in Washington, D.C.

George R. Lewis, known to his friends as "Bud," of the Fenway section of Boston, died on Monday, June 7, of AIDS related illnesses.

George was born in the Fall River area in 1943. He grew up in a foster home. Upon graduating high school, he was drafted into the U.S. Army, studied mechanics, and learned to fix and maintain "Huey" helicopters. He spent approximately two years in Vietnam, saved his sergeant's life, and was honorably discharged.

After returning from Vietnam, Lewis' vocation was car mechanics. He taught himself classical piano, and became proficient in both harmony theory and classical technique.

George had a great sense of humor, was always an optimist, and most generous both personally and professionally. He always fixed his friends' cars for minimal cost, and whenever a friend had a car emergency, Bud was there to help in five minutes.

His principles were that time was much more important in life than money or material goods. A rare individual, indeed. He lived life truly as he wanted to and was a role model to many people who were privileged to know him. The best example of his great life of independent spirit is that he never wanted to work on a Monday! Being a car mechanic, he was able to work a flexible schedule and usually was able to abide by his principle that time was the most precious commodity. A unique person of talent, generosity and honesty. He would constantly offer help and advice to his friends on any subject at any time of day. George was always there for his friends, all of whom will miss him greatly.

George is survived by his family of friends, among them Tony Dorato, Dennis McLeod, Paul Cahan, Terry Goodwin, Fred Cummings, Billy, and many others. He was laid to rest at Bourne National Cemetery in Bourne, Mass.

LLORENS - Raul, 41, film maker on April 8, 1994. Survived by his mother, Herminia Piriz, long time companion, Tim Klingner and many loving friends. Crestwood Memorial Chapel, 33 Spring St., NYC Monday, April 11 6:30-9:00PM.

Karl Logan, one of Los Angeles's top fashion designers, died of complications from AIDS Feb. 2 in Los Angeles. He was 43. Logan launched his women's wear collection in 1986, and two years later he was named California Designer of the Year. 1993

George Leavitt

George Robert Leavitt, 68, of Washington, D.C., died on Sunday, November 22, 1992, at his home of complications associated with AIDS, according to his friend, Jacob Jelks of Washington, D.C.

Leavitt was born in Limestone, Maine, and moved to Northern Virginia in the early 1970s. A resident first of Arlington and then of Alexandria, he was active with the Alexandria Gay and Lesbian Community Association until he moved to D.C. in 1986. Jelks said he also was a member of LifeLink, a coalition of people with AIDS in the D.C. area.

Leavitt worked for 40 years as an accountant. He was controller for R.H. Bogle, an Alexandria-based chemical company, for ten years, and then worked for four years as a financial consultant to Victory Van Corporation, a moving and storage firm in Alexandria. After he left Victory in 1988, Leavitt worked part-time as an accounting consultant. He also worked part-time for two years with the U.S. Bureau of the Census, collecting data for the 1990 census, according to Jelks.

Leavitt was married for 22 years, until his divorce in 1968. He served in the Army during World War II, and remained active with the services after his 1946 discharge as a member of the Army National Guard.

Leavitt's interests included gardening, listening to music, and going to the theater. Jelks said he regularly bought season tickets to the Kennedy Center.

In addition to Jelks, Leavitt is survived by four sisters, Gladys Hanscomb of Rutherfordton, N.C.; Jackie Beaupre of Caribou, Maine; and Eva Leighton and June Noyes, both of Limestone; three daughters Cheryl Hicks of Jacksonville, Fla.; Shelly DeKay of Saluda, N.C.; and Sharon Leavitt of Florida; and four grandchildren.

Leavitt's remains were cremated and interred in Arlington National Cemetery.

Steven Lembesis Memorial Service

A memorial service will be held for Steven C. Lembesis, 39, who died June 7, 1993, of complications associated with AIDS. Lembesis lived in Washington, D.C. and was originally from Birmingham, Ala., according to his friend Susan Rese of D.C. In addition to Rese, Lembesis is survived by his partner Carlos Carrero of D.C. The memorial service is at 4 p.m., Saturday, June 12, at St. Margaret's Episcopal Church, 1820 Connecticut Ave., NW.

Our dear friend Stephen passed through a newly opened door on July 23. Born in Jamaica, New York, on July 10, 1956, he was one of five children in a traditional Irish Catholic family. Stephen attended the State University of New York at Buffalo, and earned a bachelor of science degree in psychology in 1978. From Buffalo, he moved to Manhattan, where he worked for the Social Security Administration. He moved to Boston in 1983 and worked for Trans National Travel and State Street Bank before returning to New York for a short time in 1989. Stephen returned to Boston in 1991, and most recently worked for Justice Resource Institute at the River Street Community in Mattapan. He had been a resident of the Fenway since his return from New York.

Because Stephen was warm, loving and funny, he was well-liked and leaves many friends in Boston, New York, and California. We will all miss his charm, wit and charisma. He was never without an encouraging word, or an appropriate line from an old movie. His sense of humor was his trademark, and he would often laugh at himself as well.

So we bid farewell, friend, knowing you are only in the next room waiting for us. You have touched all of our lives with goodness and warmth, and we have all been blessed to have had a friend like you. God-speed.

Roy London

Hollywood acting coach Roy London died of AIDS-related complications Aug. 8 at his home in Los Angeles. He was 50. Among his students were Garry Shandling, Jeff Goldblum, Brad Pitt, Michelle Pfeiffer, Patrick Swayze, Faye Dunaway and Geena Davis—who acknowledged London when she won her Best Supporting Actress Oscar for "The Accidental Tourist." In 1992, London made his feature film directing debut with "Diary of a Hit Man," which starred Forest Whitaker; London's students Sherilynn Fenn and Sharon Stone also appeared in the film. A former actor and writer, London was a member of the Royal Shakespeare Company and a founding member of New York's Circle Rep; the latter presented several of his plays. He came to Los Angeles in 1975 in a production of "The Two of Us" with Lynn Redgrave, and stayed, expecting to write for television. Though he soon turned to teaching, he continued to write. His credits include the 1988 Patrick Swayze film, "Tiger Warsaw." He is survived by his life partner, producer Tim Healey, and by his mother and his brother.

Cary Scott Lowenstein, Singer and Dancer, 30

12-6-92

Cary Scott Lowenstein, a dancer, singer and actor, died on Sunday at Hospice-by-the-Sea in Boca Raton, Fla. He was 30 years old and lived in Los Angeles.

He died of AIDS, said his parents, Daniel and Toby Lowenstein.

Mr. Lowenstein played Mike, the character who sang "I Can Do That," in the national company of "A Chorus Line" in 1980 and made his Broadway debut in the same role a year later. His other Broadway credits include "Song and Dance" and "The Tap Dance Kid."

He was in the national tour of "Sophisticated Ladies," where he met Lynn Gendron, a dancer, choreographer and actress, whom he later married. The couple toured the United States and Europe with Peter Maxwell's Ballroom Dance Theater and appeared in the singer Ute Lemper's live stage show and television special in Germany, France and Sweden.

Ms. Gendron Lowenstein died of a brain tumor last year. In addition to his parents, who live in Boca Raton, Mr. Lowenstein is survived by three sisters, Wendi Jacobson of Manhattan, Lori Mase of Springfield, N.J., and Gaye, of Los Angeles.

David Lourea, 47, a prominent bisexual activist and safer sex educator, died Nov. 10 of AIDS complications. Place of death was not reported. Lourea cofounded the San Francisco Bisexual Center and Bisexual Counseling Services, appeared on the Phil Donahue Show to discuss bisexuality, and contributed to the anthology Bi Any Other Name. He co-authored the Complete Guide to Safer Sex, and in 1991 presented testimony before the National Commission on AIDS.

LISCOE—Kieran. Died May 12, 1993. Rock and roll star. Hero of the Stonewall Riots and the war against AIDS, who triumphed over adversity with wit, wisdom, courage and glamour, and won a place in our hearts and minds forever. Memorial contributions may be made to The Actors' Fund, 1501 Broadway, Suite 518, New York, New York 10036.

LEVIN—Stuart Andrew, 36 years old. Dearly beloved son of Rita and Maximo. Beloved father of Nikki. Beloved brother of Liz and David. Beloved uncle of Lori, Matti and Abigail. Beloved friend of David Lisboa. 8-26-93

Robert J. LaBombard

Nov. 13, 1949–April 25, 1993

Robert passed away on the evening of April 25, at Ralph K. Davies Medical Center. Formerly of Rouses Point, New York, Robert worked for the Veterans Administration in Albany, New York, before moving to San Francisco in 1974. He continued with the Veterans Administration here in San Francisco as an electrician until his death.

Robert also worked as a volunteer for Ellipse, a local Bay Area AIDS Organization. Many people with the AIDS virus were the recipients of his tireless and unselfish caregiving through this organization. Robert also worked as a volunteer at Gl'de Memorial Church feeding the hungry and homeless. ▼

Donald LeRoy Lippe

April 2, 1933 – April 11, 1995

Donald Lippe, also known as Donald Lipper, was born in Wichita, Kansas, and, besides his many residences in San Francisco over the past 30 years-plus, has lived also in Palm Springs, San Diego and Santa Fe as well as Paris, Amsterdam and Provence. He is survived by his mother, brother, nephew, companion Dan and his many, many friends.

Through his zest for life which allowed for no compromises, Donald remains a larger-than-life role model for us all. He is deeply missed. A memorial gathering for Donald will be held at 2154-A Market Street (between Church and Sanchez) on Saturday, April 29, 4-7 p.m. ▼

The Rector of Trinity Episcopal Church charges that the San Francisco Public Administrator bungled the disposition of the remains of a local gay man, and homophobia is to blame.

The Reverend Robert Cromey said that after Dr. Jack Lee died at St. Francis Hospital earlier this month, the San Francisco College of Mortuary Science, Bill Algieri, Lee's lover of 15 years, and Cromey agreed to pay to have Lee's body cremated and would pay the costs.

But because Lee was indigent, and because he had no surviving relatives except a son he had not seen in two decades, the case was assigned to the Public Administrator's office and his remains were turned over to the coroner's office for handling.

After the legally-required search for assets and relatives, which was unsuccessful in locating Lee's son, the disposition of the remains was turned over to the coroner's office by the Public Administration, according to Cromey — without notifying Algieri or Trinity or the mortuary — after which Lee's remains were summarily cremated.

"Bill wanted to see Jack's body for a last look before the cremation. He was denied that opportunity by the action of these bureaucracies,"

Cromey said. "Would this have happened if the deceased and his lover were straight?"

Administrative Coroner Joseph Surdyka of the San Francisco Medical Examiner's Office told the Bay Area Reporter that the incident was "an unfortunate administrative error" by the Public Administrator's office.

"If we had known, it wouldn't have happened. If a friend of long standing was going to handle having a memorial arranged and a cremation, they could have gone ahead," Surdyka said.

But because there was an absence of notification about Algieri's wishes, and that the cremation and disposition had been arranged elsewhere, the coroner's office had Lee's body cremated.

Cromey told the Bay Area Reporter that the issue underscores the unfairness of the treatment of lesbians and gays: if the couple had been heterosexual and married — or if gay marriages were recognized — there would have been no question that the surviving spouse's wishes would have been followed.

"Bill was with his lover for 15 years. There was just no reason for this. I'm really outraged over this. I'm really pissed off," the reverend said.

Public Administrator Ricardo Hernandez told the B.A.R. that the incident was not the fault of the Public Administrator's office, but of the Coroner's office — and that all his office does is to search to find assets of the deceased.

By law, Lee's ashes may be held by the coroner's office for one year, pending a claim by relatives — but Cromey says because Algieri is the only survivor, he can pick up the ashes for the cost of Lee's final disposition: $447.73. ▼

Christopher Lollick

Oct. 18, 1957–Sept. 4, 1993

The remaining half of the celebrated San Francisco duo Raymond and Christopher died recently in Phoenix, AZ. A Bay Area native, Christopher had an eclectic, free spirit that made him one of the city's most colorful characters. In the late '70s and early '80s. Christopher was often spotted in full-tilt drag or in bathrobe and pajamas at the Balcony and other S.F. haunts. At a Folsom Street Fair a few years ago, our Tini tried to pull an elephant into the old Stud, where he was a full-fledged Studette.

In 1987 he and his lover Raymond moved to Phoenix to pursue a quieter lifestyle. Christopher is survived by his younger brother Jason, his (sometimes) loving wife Darla, and many friends and acquaintances. We'll miss you Tini.

Paul Lee

Paul Martin Lee, 40, of Silver Spring, Maryland, died on Monday, April 12, 1993, at his home of complications associated with AIDS, according to his close friend Ed Stanley of Washington, D.C.

Lee distinguished himself in his career as a funeral director who championed of the rights of Gays and those who died of complications from AIDS, according to Stanley. He fought many battles to see that the wishes of the deceased were respected and honored. Lee's work was featured in articles in the Washington Post and the Washington Blade.

According to Stanley, Lee also started a movement within the Funeral Directors Association in D.C. to allow doctors to remove AIDS as the cause of death on death certificates because of the stigma attached to it, and was instrumental in the D.C. government's recent decision to stop using AIDS as a cause of death on certificates. Because of his work, the immediate cause of death, such as heart failure or pneumonia, is listed for people with AIDS who die.

"Although Paul believed that it was necessary for the public to understand the extent of the terrible illness from which he and so many others suffered, he understood the pain and complications of those who survived the loss of a loved one," Stanley said.

Lee was an active member of the Gay community. He was a member of the Advisory Committee of the Gay charity Brother, Help Thyself (BHT), D.C. Sports, and the Atlantic States Gay Rodeo Association.

Known for his compassion for others, his sense of humor, and his "electric blue eyes," Lee's death has "created a crevasse for those who loved him," according to Stanley.

Born and raised in Meyersdale, Pa., Lee graduated from the Wesley Seminary in 1976. He returned to Meyersdale and became the assistant speaker at the First United Methodist Church in Meyersdale.

Lee in 1981 graduated from the Cincinnati Ohio College of Mortuary Science. He then moved to the D.C. area and began his career as a funeral director. Lee worked at several funeral homes including the Robert A. Pumphrey funeral home, Donald M. Stein funeral home, Murphy funeral home, Demain funeral home, and Rapp funeral home.

In addition to Stanley and many other friends in this area, Lee is survived by his sisters, Marie Hynde of Harrisburg, Pa. and Trudy Kay of Warren, Oh., his brothers, Daniel Lee of Lansing, Mich. and Ronald Lee of Meyersdale, Pa., and several nieces.

Lee's remains were cremated on Wednesday, April 14. A Celebration of Life will be held at 1 p.m., on Saturday, May 1, at the Calvary Lutheran Church, 9545 Georgia Ave., Silver Spring, Md.

Contributions may be made in his name to Food and Friends P.O. Box 70601, Washington, DC 20024; or the First United Methodist Church of Meyersdale, 336 Main St., Meyersdale PA 15552.

Nathan Lipsitz

May 2, 1953—May 13, 1993

Friends, family and professional colleagues recently mourned the passing of Nathan Lipsitz on May 13 from AIDS. His passing culminated a life dedicated to growth and development.

Born May 2, 1953 in Baltimore, Maryland to Jack and Elsie Lipsitz, Nathan was always drawn to the miracle of helping things grow. At an early age, he learned to love gardening from his mother, an activity he joyously pursued all his life.

Professionally, Nathan accomplished a great deal in terms of his own personal growth. He earned two masters degrees, one from the University of Maryland in American Literature and one from San Francisco State University in Educational Technology.

Using his strong educational background, he focused on a career in training and development. In the area of public education, he designed highly successful educational programs for gifted children. In the corporate world he designed and taught a multitude of management/personal development programs both at the Bank of America and as the Manager of Training for Charles Schwab & Co., Inc.

For those who were blessed with Nathan's friendship, they got to know his selfless ego, his dry, acerbic wit, and his unwavering loyalty as a friend.

Special thanks to Dr. Toby Dwyer and the OLS staff at Davies Medical Center.

Nathan is survived by his father, Jack; his sister, Susie; and her husband,

Barry; his brother, Mark; and his devoted partner of nine years — John. Friends wishing to make a donation in his name are encouraged to support Project Open hand. ▼

Man with AIDS, 38, exerts his will and dies

5-10-93

"I have the utmost respect for life. Don't get me wrong," Joseph C. Leone, who was dying of AIDS, said recently. "But when you can't have quality of life, that's when you have to start looking and start drawing the line."

On Monday afternoon, Joe Leone drew the line.

Unable to talk, he used hand signals and facial expressions to demand his removal from the ventilator he was hooked up to for several hours at Boston City Hospital after an emergency hospitalization.

The ventilator was removed. Joe Leone died. At 38.

"He completely relaxed" after the tubes were removed, Dr. Thomas Barber said yesterday. "Thirty minutes later he died."

"He just shut everything down," Barber said. "And I don't think he was dependent on the ventilator at that point. I think he just thought that this was his future and that he didn't want it.

"My personal opinion is he just relaxed and slipped away," he said.

LARKIN—Of Charlestown, July 20, 1993. Jay Jason Larkin, beloved son of the late Joseph P. and Anna Larkin. Brother of Anna Osterguy of South Boston. Beloved companion of Ted Keame. Funeral from the Commonwealth Funeral Service, 1642 Commonwealth Ave., BRIGHTON, on Friday, July 23 at 9 a.m. Funeral service at the Cathedral of the Annunciation, corner Parker & Ruggles Sts., Boston at 10 a.m. Visiting hours Thurs., 6 to 9 p.m. Donations in his memory may be made to the Salvation Army, 147 Berkeley St., Boston. Entombment at Woodlawn Cemetery in Everett.

LOVEQUIST—Of Waltham, Oct 30, 1993. Peter J. Son of Edwin H. and Ruth L. (Dahlin) Lovequist of Waltham. Brother of David E. Lovequist of Meredith, NH, and Sandra J. Lovequist of Waltham. Also survived by 1 niece, 1 nephew and 1 grand nephew. Relatives and friends are invited to attend the Graveside Service on Wednesday at 1 pm in Mt. Feake Cemetery, Waltham. Donations in his memory to the Hospice at Mission Hill, 18 Parker Hill Av, Boston, Ma. 02120, would be appreciated. Arrangements by Francis J. Joyce & Son Funeral Home, WALTHAM.

"It sounds a little corny, but I do think he willed himself to death."

Mr. Leone's battle with AIDS was chronicled two weeks ago as part of a Globe series on the expanding practice of doctors who help terminally ill patients die. His health declining rapidly, Mr. Leone talked openly about a struggle on two fronts that he had been waging against his illness.

Working with Barber and Nan Midgley, a visiting nurse who cared for him at his apartment, Mr. Leone underwent a battery of treatments to fight the disease that, in its latest assault, was robbing him of his eyesight.

But on his own, outside the accepted boundaries of medicine, he also called around Boston to line up a doctor who would secretly assist him if he chose to commit suicide.

He never asked Barber, he explained, because Barber is opposed to assisted suicide and he didn't want to put his physician of two years at risk professionally.

"I don't want him in trouble," Mr. Leone said. "Tom is probably the best doctor I've ever known."

For Mr. Leone, the issue was one of control — wanting to have a say in his death, its time and its place. He wanted to die at home. In the end, events overtook him; he died at BCH.

But he did manage to reassert himself and have the final say, according to Barber and others.

"They respected his wishes and took him off," said Midgley, who noticed Mr. Leone seemed to be weakening when she last saw him, on Friday. "And he was able to stay home until early Monday, which is where he always wanted to be."

Yesterday, Barber was still trying to sort out the events leading to Mr. Leone's death.

Discovered early Monday outside his apartment by a neighbor, Mr. Leone was taken by ambulance to BCH's emergency room suffering from bruises and a concussion.

"Early Monday morning, either there was an intruder in back or he thought there was an intruder," said Barber. "Joe bolted out the front door and tumbled down the steps."

DIED: Keeston Lowery, 43, gay political organizer, of complications from AIDS Aug. 29 in Portland, Ore. He was an aide to Portland city council member Michael Lindbergh. / 993

Unable to speak, his vital signs unstable, Mr. Leone was placed on a ventilator. By early afternoon he was conscious and, said Barber, "furious to be there" and to be on the ventilator. Using his hands, he told Barber, a friend and his sister that he wanted the tubes and the ventilator removed.

"True to form, he took control even in the last half hour of his life and communicated what he wanted," said Barber. "I think he was happy to have some loved ones there and to have achieved some sense of control."

Mr. Leone spent his boyhood in Charlestown, attended Boston College and served in the Navy for more than a decade. He was a dental hygienist in the South End until 1989, when he tested HIV positive.

Mr. Leone said he felt strongly about legalizing doctor-assisted suicides "so that people in my position can do what they need to do without fearing any repercussions to others."

"He was just a wonderful man, and I had a lot of respect for him," said Midgley, who cared for Mr. Leone for nearly three years. "It's just hard, because you don't have time to prepare for it and talk about it when it happens this quickly. Joe is a hard one to let go of."

Funeral arrangements were incomplete last night.

Ferris Lehman

June 2, 1904—March 11, 1993

Ferris Lehman died in San Francisco, a home he made for about 30 years. An early pioneer in the gay rights movement in San Francisco, Ferris was a long and devoted member of S.I.R., the Society for Individual Rights, the first truly gay rights organization in San Francisco. He spent many hours devoting his time and energy to the success and membership of S.I.R. In later years, he was a member of the Pride Foundation and continued working for the benefit of gay people. He was an active member of the Church of the Advent of Christ the King. Ferris was a former resident of Chicago and had served honorably in the U.S. military.

Travel was his interest and he spent many vacations visiting the places that many of us dream about. A good friend, he died from cancer after a serious bout with this illness. A funeral service was held and a funeral mass by Father Bowersox of the Church of the Advent.

Ferris lived a long and productive life and was very honorable, kind, and always a gentleman. He is survived by members of his family in Arkansas and in San Jose, California. He will always be remembered by his many friends. ▼

Alexander P. Lim III 1993

Alex Lim, a resident of Brookline and a longtime AIDS survivor, passed away on May 1 at the Mission Hill Hospice.

Alex was born in Panama City, Panama. He was educated at North Texas University where he received a BS in Education in 1974. He moved to San Francisco where he continued to teach until he moved to Boston in 1986.

While in Boston, Alex launched a new career as a training coordinator for the Massachusetts Halfway Houses, Inc. His love of people and the Broadway stage was expressed through his volunteer efforts with a Brookline-based group of singers called The Halfnotes.

Alex is survived by his family in Panama, his two children Jason and Stephanie, his close friends Robert Jacobs, John O'Neil and the O'Neil family.

A funeral service will be held at St. Aiden's Church in Brookline at 11 a.m. on Sat., May 15. A reception follows at 1236 Beacon St., #2.

Remembrances may be made to a favorite charity.

David Loebel

David Loebel, 37, of San Francisco, died of complications due to AIDS on May 24. David lived in Boston from 1973 to 1982. He grew up in New York City and graduated from Brandeis University in 1977. David was employed at the Hampshire House for a year following graduation, and worked at Jordan Marsh as an assistant manager in the shoe department from 1978 to 1982. He then moved to San Francisco where he earned an M.B.A. from the University of California at Berkeley in 1984. He worked in corporate sales and financing at A.T.&T. from 1984 until the time of his death. During 1991, he was selected by A.T.&T. to work as a loaned executive at the United Way in their fundraising campaign. David was also very active in AIDS activities in San Francisco, and worked as a neighborhood precinct captain in the Clinton presidential campaign.

David loved many things in life, including food, music, travel, dancing, theater, movies, and his friends. His life was very full, and it was impossible for anyone who knew David not to be touched by his spirit and enthusiasm. David maintained an extremely positive and hopeful attitude even after learning his HIV status, and he strongly believed that this helped him to stay healthy for many years. He brought a great deal of laughter and joy to all those who knew him. He leaves behind good friends in Boston, San Francisco, New York and elsewhere.

David is survived by his parents, Suzanne and Ernst Loebel, his sister Judy Loebel, his brother-in-law John Gordon, his nieces Ana and Naomi, his nephew Sean, and his dog Liza. He will be greatly and lovingly missed by many, many people.

A memorial will be held in San Francisco on June 19.

WILLIAM PATRICK LEONARD, 38, an actor, theatrical director and choreographer, died March 21 in San Francisco of AIDS complications. He appeared on Broadway and toured in Dreamgirls.

Wayne Gary Lee

A few weeks after his 34th birthday, Wayne Gary Lee left this earth to go to a place of peace. At his side was Steve Robinson, his life partner and lover of more than ten years.

He leaves behind his parents, brothers, sisters and many friends who loved him. He will be remembered in many ways, from his glowing smile to his need to always have the last word!

Wayne enjoyed life's simple things, a Sunday drive, a walk at the beach and most of all, being around his many friends.

Wayne was born in New Jersey but spent the last decade in the Bay Area. He worked for a local law firm which was very supportive until the end. Steve and his friends wish to thank the staff of Ralph K. Davies Medical Center for their immeasurable support, compassion and professionalism. 8-1-93

We will miss Wayne, but his life will continue to live in our hearts always. ▼

Lupin Loughborough

July 3, 1945 - July 4, 1993

Berkeley lost one of its most civic-minded residents with the passing of Lupin Loughborough on July 4, 1993.

A native of Michigan, Lupin spent most of his life in Santa Rosa where he graduated from Santa Rosa High. He attended Stanford University before earning his Bachelor Degree in Sociology from Sonoma State University and his Bachelor of Science Degree in Nursing from California State University, Hayward.

Until his retirement in 1991, Lupin was a neonatal nurse at Alta Bates Hospital in Berkeley and was active in numerous professional organizations. As a community leader, he was also active in the East Bay Gay and Lesbian Democratic Club and the East Bay AIDS Resource Organization (EBARO).

Lupin is survived by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. William Loughborough; his sisters, Nancy Loughborough and Carol Freeland; his nieces, Yvonne, Melanie and Tiffany Freeland; his longterm companion, John Peterson; and a legion of relatives and friends.

A memorial service will be held on Saturday, July 17 at The Berkeley City Club located at 2315 Durant Avenue in Berkeley at 5 p.m. In lieu of flowers, the family requests that donations be made to the Center for AIDS Services in Oakland. ▼

Scott Lichty

Scott Michael Lichty, 30, of Washington, D.C., died Monday, May 31, 1993, at Fairfax Hospital in Virginia of complications associated with AIDS, according to his friend Howard Walseman of D.C.

Lichty was born in Rochester, Minn., and raised in Cherry Grove, Minn. He received a bachelor's degree in Christian ethics and piano performance from St. Olaf College, Northfield, Minn., in 1985. While he was at St. Olaf, Lichty spent a semester studying liberation theology in Managua, Nicaragua. Lichty in 1986 moved to D.C. to work toward a master's degree in theological studies at Wesley Theological Seminary.

Using his graduate emphasis in counseling for the terminally ill, he worked at the National Institutes of Health of Bethesda, Md., in medical oncology and infectious diseases from 1987 to 1988. He also worked for the former Perpetual Savings Bank from 1988 to 1992, at which point he retired for health reasons. Lichty was a volunteer buddy to people living with AIDS for the Whitman-Walker Clinic of D.C.

An active musician, Lichty was the organist at Eldbrooke United Methodist Church from 1986-90. He also served as interim accompanist to the Gay and Lesbian Chorus of Washington, D.C. While at Wesley Seminary he served as student organist.

Lichty's remains were cremated.

In addition to Walseman, Lichty is survived by his father and stepmother, Wallace and Dorothy Lichty; and three brothers, Harlan; Charles; and Mark, all of Cherry Grove, Minn. He was predeceased by his mother, Arlene Michener Lichty.

A celebration of Lichty's life will be held Sunday, June 27, at 3 p.m., at Eldbrooke United Methodist Church, 4100 River Rd., NW.

Contributions can be made in Lichty's name to either the Whitman-Walker Clinic, 1407 S St., NW, Washington, DC 20009; or to the Minnesota AIDS Project, 2025 Nicolet Ave. South, Suite 200, Minneapolis, MN 55404.

Charles D. Lare

De. 16, 1946–Nov. 29, 1992

After a long and courageous battle, Charlie passed from this life in the early morning as he slept. As he wished, he was at home, in his own bed, surrounded by his extended family members, Michael Harryman, Ron Comella and his dear friend and business partner of 25 years, Doug Donaghy. He was not afraid. He is survived by his mother, Frieda Lare of Pennsylvania. He was preceeded by his domestic partner, Geoffrey Hay, who passed away in October of 1991.

After a 12-year career as a manager at Federal Home Loan Bank of San Francisco, Charlie retired and left the city he loved to run Paradise Cove Resort at the Russian River. His love of nature, as well as a keen sense of making people feel comfortable, contributed to his success in business. Some of Charlie's pleasures included Big Buicks, traveling, electric trains, Divine, Doris Day, power tools, the beach, cats, being naked, and a good smart-ass remark. Charlie was bright and spiritual with a very dry wit. He would brush the top of that mustache and calmly tell you something so funny you would laugh to tears.

He made the best of his final days catalog shopping from Bloomingdales and occasionally sneaking out for a drive. Charlie had many friends. We love him and miss him every day. A special thank-you to Dr. Mary Bogel, who helped him to help himself; and, to the Spectrum Hospice nurses for their wonderful care. On his birthday, we shared stories, chocolate cake and applauded this very unique and special man's life. ▼

BARBARA LAZEAR ASCHER wrote a book called "Landscape Without Gravity: A Memoir of Grief," emanating from her feelings about the death of her brother, Robert Allen Lazear Jr., from AIDS in 1989 at age 31. But that effort, searing and poignant though it is, did not seem enough, and she said yesterday, "I tried to think over a long period of time how I could somehow use the book to do something bigger for the AIDS effort." She ruled out donating any proceeds from sales of the book, which arrives in bookstores this week. "The first printing goes to pay the advance," she said, "and there would be nothing left for AIDS."

She made a contribution to the Gay Men's Health Crisis, and in return 10 days ago she received a red metal pin that was a replica of the AIDS ribbon. "As soon as I saw it, I knew what I was going to do," she said. "I bought $500 worth of pins from G.M.H.C., and when my publishers heard what I was doing, they said they would match it."

Now, 160 people who buy the book at any of six shops in Manhattan — Books and Company, the Corner Bookstore, Madison Avenue Bookshop, Burlington Books, Endicott Booksellers and Shakespeare & Company — get a pin, too. When those run out, regular red ribbons will be distributed to buyers of the book.

Ms. Ascher is forgoing the usual parties to celebrate publication of the book by Delphinium Books next week. Instead, she said, "I am doing a reading and having a party in the gay bar in New Orleans where Bobby was the bartender. His lover said, 'Don't you want more decorum?', and I said, 'No, this is the way Bobby would have wanted to do it.'"

Jimmie L. Linebarger

Jan. 23, 1935–Feb. 23, 1993

Our friend Jim died peacefully of AIDS related complications at Garden Sullivan Hospital. We want to thank the staff there for their support and wonderful care. He died as he lived, with good humor, strength, and with spiritual insight.

His great love was the opera. Many of us will remember wonderful Saturday evenings in the third row of the Opera House, as well as being in his home listening to his vast music collection.

Those of us who knew him at the Silent Way Meditation Center remember his great devotion to his spiritual life. A long time student of Vedanta, his commitment was an inspiration to all who shared this with him. He was a retired senior examiner for the Federal Reserve Bank of San Francisco. He served in the U.S. Navy from 1956 to 1960.

The son of Thomas E. Linebarger and Jewell Sevaffar Linebarger, who preceded him in death, he is survived by his sister, Betty J. Weis, four aunts, one uncle, six nieces and nephews and six grand nieces and nephews, all of whom he loved dearly.

Friends and relatives are invited to memorial services at Ebenezer Lutheran Church, 678 Portola, March 6 at 1 p.m. In lieu of flowers, contributions may be made to any AIDS charity. ▼

John Lemmon died of AIDS on May 3, 1993. He was active and healthy up to the last two weeks of his life. John was beloved by his many friends for the strength of his spirit and for his many talents. John's last five months were among his happiest when he was with his partner, Waldo Gibson.

In his professional career, he was named a Sr. Vice-President with Government Finance Associates at the age of 33. His clients included the Port of San Francisco and the San Francisco Public Utilities Commission. As a part of his volunteer work, he led a delegation of financial experts to Russia who helped advise government leaders on the financing of an AIDS hospital.

In his last year, during which time he was on disability, he wrote, published and hand-bound a book of poetry titled, "Deliverance from Purgatory."

John grew up in South Carolina and graduated as his high school valedictorian. He received degrees from the University of South Carolina and the Harvard University Graduate School of Design.

John will be remembered by his family and friends for the love he gave to them and his ability to overcome almost any obstacle. ▼ 35-98510

Daniel King Lawson

March 30, 1956-June 22, 1993

Daniel passed away peacefully on June 22, 1993 at approximately 9:30 p.m. at S.F.G.H. Adam Thompson of Adam's House in San Rafael was the last of Daniel's friends and family to see him alive. He had been admitted only that morning to treat some new symptoms resulting from his AIDS.

Daniel was first diagnosed HIV+ in March 1991, but remained strong and relatively symptom free until April, 1993. He was treated with love and care through the AIDS clinic, Ward 86, at S.F.G.H.

In August 1992, Daniel became part of the family at Adams House, a residential facility for HIV and AIDS clients in San Rafael. Daniel made many new friends who loved and supported him and seemed to boost his morale. He gave as much love as he was given.

In caring for Daniel, special thanks are extended to Adam Thompson, administrator, Debbie Wells, San Francisco General Hospital and Scott Daniels, emotional support volunteer from the Marin AIDS project.

Daniel was born and raised in Jacksonville, Florida, but became a happy resident of San Francisco in 1989. He is survived by his mother, Elizabeth Lawson of Jacksonville; his father, Nathaniel of North Carolina; two brothers and many friends and relatives.

A memorial and gathering of friends is planned for July 11, 1993 at 2 p.m. at Adam's House, 907 Del Ganado Rd., San Rafael. For more information or directions, contact either Adam or Debbie at 507-1725.

Donations in Daniel's memory may be made to the charity of your choice. ▼

Patrick Lippert, directed 'Rock the Vote' campaign

LOS ANGELES — Patrick Lippert, the leader of last year's celebrated Rock the Vote political campaign, has died of AIDS complications. He was 35.

Mr. Lippert died Tuesday at Daniel Freeman Hospital in Marina del Rey after a two-year battle with the disease.

In 1991, Mr. Lippert became executive director of Rock the Vote, a nationwide campaign to sign up young voters that relied heavily on MTV. 7-13-93

The group registered 350,000 people, and claimed credit for an 18 percent increase in the turnout among 18- to 24-year-olds in the 1992 presidential election.

Rock the Vote also played a key role in Congress' passage of the "motor voter" bill, which allows people to register to vote when they get or renew their driver's licenses.

President Clinton called to express his condolences Tuesday to Mr. Lippert's parents, Bob and Toni Lippert of Shoreview, Minn.

"He said he wanted us to know that they thought Patrick was a very unique young man, and that his contribution was very meaningful," his mother said.

Born in St. Paul, Minn., Mr. Lippert moved to Los Angeles in 1981 and worked in the California state Assembly campaign of Tom Hayden (D-Santa Monica), now a state senator.

Mr. Lippert later became director of a Hollywood political action group created by Hayden and his then-wife, actress Jane Fonda.

Mr. Lippert was credited with bringing young actors such as Rob Lowe, Ally Sheedy and Molly Ringwald into the group.

He also served as celebrity coordinator of the Michael Dukakis and Gary Hart presidential campaigns. JS Varoio - AP

Ron Lee, 56, a psychotherapist who helped declassify homosexuality as a disease, died Sept. 11 of melanoma complications. Place of death was not reported. Lee helped address the mental health needs of Gays in San Francisco, and organize the country's first publicly funded human sexuality training program for mental health clients. In 1969, he was the first member of the National Association of Social Workers to come out as Gay. (Bay Area Reporter) 1992

Barry Alan Lubow

Aug. 18, 1953

June 19, 1993

Barry Alan Lubow of Los Angeles passed away on June 19 of AIDS and cryptosporidiosis, at the Chris Brownlie Hospice in Los Angeles.

He is survived by Paul D. Liehr, his loving companion of three years; dear friend Hazel Aberry; mother Lyssa Bridges of Fresno; stepmother Marilyn Lubow of Los Angeles; and his sisters, Wendy Lubow of Los Angeles and Samantha Goldstein of Granada Hills.

Lubow was a hairstylist who had studied at Marinellus' School of Beauty in San Rafael, Calif. He worked at David Dru Salon in Beverly Hills and Hair by Henrik in San Francisco.

He volunteered his time with the "Stop LaRouche AIDS Quarantine" effort in the mid-1980's, and as a food delivery person for Project Angel Food in 1990 and 1991, until he was no longer able to do so.

Lubow was also a frequent speaker for the Shanti Foundation's public relations efforts and was featured in a Los Angeles Times article about the AIDS Healthcare Foundation, and also on KABC-TV.

His friends described him as a "devoted and caring lover and homemaker for Paul and himself. A lover of animals, he always cared for or found homes for homeless dogs and cats and the sight of a suffering animal would ruin his whole day."

Lubow travelled frequently for the last three years with Liehr to Palm Springs, Monterey, Tucson, Laguna Beach and, in January 1992 for one last time to Hawaii, where he once lived for six months.

A memorial gathering was held Sunday, July 11 at Liehr's home. Donations are requested to either the Chris Brownlie Hospice, 1300 Scott St., Los Angeles, CA 90026, or to Nechama's "Project Chicken Soup," 6505 Wilshire Blvd., Los Angeles, CA 90048.

LYNCH—William (Ivan), 35, on November 28, 1993. He is survived by his partner, Dennis Teston; his mother, Kathleen M. of East Syracuse, NY; his brothers, Daniel E. of Greenfield Center, NY, and David A. of Manlius, NY; and his sister Margaret M. Reavely of Madison, CT. Memorial service to be announced at a later date. Contributions may be made to Hair Cares Foundation, Inc., 91 Millbar Boulevard, Farmingdale, NY 11735, or to Friends in Deed, 594 Broadway, Suite 706, New York, NY 10012.

LAKE—John William. Survived by parents John A. and Cady Wilma, sister Cady Hill and companion Franklin Cogliano; also survived by Nephew Sirus Orndoff, uncle Julian Lake, aunt Norma Watkins and cousin Nancy McCormick. Memorial Services will be at 1 P.M. on Wednesday, December 8, 1993, at Moore & Sons Funeral Home, 1219 N. Davis, Arlington, Texas. 12-6-93

James Paul Lemke

Jan. 14, 1962-June 23, 1993

The laughter has stopped. Jim died peacefully after a brave two year battle with AIDS. He leaves behind his loving mother Jean Thomas of Las Vegas, who is truly an angel. His father, Richard Lemke of Missouri; his sister, Mary, who provided Jim's care for the last few weeks of his life, nine other brothers and sisters, as well as numerous friends from San Francisco to San Diego to Missouri. He was a brother, a son, a friend, and of course, a sister.

For all of us, Jim was the one who made us laugh in the face of this disease. That was Jim's nature — finding the humor, no matter how difficult. He loved life for its simple pleasures. He enjoyed drawing almost as much as he enjoyed men! His appreciation of the male form was enviable.

An informal memorial service will be held in Jim's honor on Saturday, July 24, at Lafayette Park in San Francisco. Call Jim at 931-5155 or Diane at 655-6706 for details.

Good bye dear friend, we will all miss you and we will all be seeing you again.

Eddie "Rosa" Lewelling

March 5, 1948-June 30, 1993

A gentle giant was asked to take an exit from this theatre, to perform on a grander stage.

Edward "Eddie" Lewelling passed from us on Wednesday, June 30, 1993, after suffering from complications with AIDS. Those who knew Eddie, and there are many, from Polk to the Tenderloin, to Castro and beyond, realize what an honor it was to have been in his company.

In 1985, Eddie was chosen Miss Tavern Guild using "Ten Cents A Dance." His theme raised more money than anyone, a figure that has yet to be surpassed.

A quick retort, a personal acknowledgement, or his aura of giving and caring with joy, endeared this man to all who crossed his path in this world.

Will miss you, "Rosa." We love you, and please, keep smiling for us.

As per Eddie's request, a celebration of his life, "One ole' shit kicking party," will be held at Kimo's, 1351 Polk St., on Sunday, August 15, 1993, from 2-6 p.m. The party will be hosted by family and friends.

Can anyone top your glass trick? ▼

LEVY—Henry Ross (Hank), 39, on December 24, 1993. Award-Winning composer, lyricist and musical director whose witty and warm works filled cabarets, regional, off-broadway and Broadway theatres. Graduate of Indiana University School of Music and member of ASCAP. Survived by his companion Clement Richard; parents, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert N. Levy; grandmother, Mrs. Samuel A. Rosenberg; brothers Adam and Robert; sister Betsy Krause; nephew, Sam Levy and nieces Sarah and Anna Krause. Funeral services Tuesday, December 28, in Wilkes-Barre, PA. Contributions may be made to God's Love We Deliver or to Mario Bolero Accosta, a Columbian child Henry sponsored, Children's International, POB 419055, Kansas City, MO 64141.

LASKER—Mary (Mrs. Albert D. Lasker). It is with great sadness that we note the passing of Mary Woodward Lasker, Emeritus member of the Board of Directors of the American Foundation for AIDS Research (AmFAR). Mary was the friend and defender of all those who suffer. She was a dedicated supporter of biomedical research to relieve the ills of the body and she believed in art and the beauty of nature to nurture the soul. To these she dedicated her long and beautiful life. We shall always be grateful to her.

Private burial service December 7th, in North Carolina. Memorial service on Thursday, January 5, 1995, 6 PM, at Judson Memorial Church, NYC.

Linda Laubenstein, 45, Physician Was a Leader in Detecting AIDS

By BRUCE LAMBERT

Linda J. Laubenstein, a Manhattan physician who in 1981 discovered some of the first mysterious cases of what became the worldwide AIDS epidemic, died on Saturday at her summer home in Chatham, Mass., on Cape Cod. She was 45 years old.

Her family said an autopsy was pending. She suffered from severe asthma and weakness from childhood polio, an illness that required three major operations and left her a paraplegic at the age of 5.

"She is incredibly important in the history of AIDS, a genuine pioneer and a real fighter for what she believed," said Larry Kramer, an author and a leader in AIDS causes.

Dr. Laubenstein inspired the character of Dr. Emma Brookner, a principal role in Mr. Kramer's play on acquired immune deficiency syndrome, "The Normal Heart." He said an agreement was near on the production of a movie version by Barbra Streisand, with Ms. Streisand playing the Laubenstein-Brookner part.

Dr. Jeffrey B. Greene, a colleague, called Dr. Laubenstein "the ultimate AIDS physician." Despite her handicap, she met patients in the emergency room in the middle of the night and even made house calls, using her motorized wheelchair and public buses. "She was sicker than most of her patients but didn't let it stop her," Dr. Greene said.

First Paper on Subject

Dr. Laubenstein and Dr. Alvin Friedman-Kien wrote the first paper to be published in a medical journal on the alarming appearance of Kaposi's sarcoma, a previously rare disease of lesions of the skin and other tissues. Most of the cases were in young gay men suffering a puzzling collapse of the immune system.

Recalling one of the first cases, she described a 33-year-old man with two purple spots behind his ears. Initially he responded to the cancer drugs she prescribed. But 18 months later he was dead, his body covered with 75 lesions.

Many more cases followed. By May 1982, she had seen 62 patients with AIDS — a fourth of the national total recorded at the time. She said then that "this problem certainly is not going away."

Her father, George Laubenstein, said

DIED: Frank Lemay, state department economist, 36, of complications from AIDS Oct. 28 in Washington, D.C. Lemay sparked a congressional investigation when he warned in 1989 that Iraqi president Saddam Hussein appeared to be diverting U.S. farm-loan foreign aid to buy weapons.

LAPPNER—Of Jamaica Plain and Provincetown, May 10, Attie, age 28, after a long illness. Beloved son of Beylan Lappner of Turkey. Dear brother of Eddie Lappner of NY and William Lappner of FL. Long time dear friend of Franz of Boston. Visiting hours at the Brady & Fallon Funeral Home, 10 Tower St. (Opposite Forest Hills MBTA Station) FOREST HILLS on Tuesday May 14 at 5-7 p.m. Funeral services private.

yesterday, "She told us from the very beginning that this is going to be a terrible epidemic."

Dr. Laubenstein's private practice grew to be predominantly AIDS cases. She and Dr. Freidman-Kien arranged the first full-scale medical conference on AIDS, at New York University in 1983. She also help to found the Kaposi's Sarcoma Research Fund in 1983.

Jobs in Office Services

In 1989, she and Dr. Greene founded Multitasking, a nonprofit organization selling office services to other businesses and employing people with AIDS as the workers. Her concern was that AIDS patients often lost their jobs and that work was vital to emotional and physical health as well as for financial support.

Dr. Laubenstein was outspoken about what she said was the neglect by government and society in fighting AIDS. Some of her views were controversial among gay groups, particularly her belief that bathhouses should be shut down to discourage unsafe sex.

Born in Boston, she grew up in Barrington, R.I. She graduated from Barnard College and New York University Medical School. Her specialties were hematology and oncology, and she was a clinical professor at the New York University Medical Center.

Surviving are her parents, George and Priscilla of Harwich Port, Mass., and a brother, Peter of Melvin Village, N.H.

David B. Lachapelle, 52

30-year Provincetown resident

9-15-93

David B. Lachapelle, a Provincetown waiter, died yesterday of complications from AIDS in Deaconess Hospital in Boston. He was 52.

Mr. Lachapelle was born in Youngstown, Ohio, and moved to Springfield, where he graduated from Cathedral High School in 1960.

For the past 30 years he was a resident of Provincetown, where he was a waiter at Fat Jack's restaurant for the last several years.

He leaves his father, Romuald Lachapelle of Centerville; three sisters, Maureen St. Amand of West Springfield, Jean Kelleher of Centerville and Ann Nugent of Longmeadow; and three brothers, Richard Lachapelle of Westfield, Raymond Lachapelle of New Jersey and Michael Lachapelle of California.

A funeral Mass will be said at 11 a.m. Friday in St. Peter the Apostle Church in Provincetown.

Carlton H. Lee Jr., 35, AIDS Panel Lobbyist

7-30-93

Carlton H. Lee Jr., the Congressional liaison officer for the National Commission on AIDS and a key figure in Congressional approval of civil rights legislation affecting people with AIDS and other disabilities, died on Friday at Presbyterian University Hospital in Pittsburgh. He was 35 years old.

Mr. Lee, who was known by his friends as Sonny, contracted hepatitis B when he served as a Peace Corps volunteer in Sierra Leone, West Africa, from 1981 to 1986. The commission said he had a toxic reaction to an experimental drug that he was taking as part of a clinical trial by the National Institutes of Health.

From 1987 to 1989, Mr. Lee was a lobbyist for the Human Rights Campaign Fund. Since 1989, Mr. Lee was the chief lobbyist for the National Commission on AIDS, where he also served as an adviser to the commission's chairwoman, Dr. June E. Osborn.

Mr. Lee grew up in Snyder, Tex., and was a graduate of American University in Washington.

He is survived by his parents, Carlton and Joy Lee of Snyder, and three sisters, Annette Truluck of Charleston, S.C.; Darlene Kriewald of Austin, Tex., and Susan Humble of Levelland, Tex.

Christopher Locke, 34

Was chef in Provincetown

8-24-93

Christopher Locke, former chef at the Mews and the Red Inn in Provincetown, died of AIDS Tuesday in his home in Nahant. He was 34.

Mr. Locke was born in Nahant. He graduated from Lynn Technical High School and attended the Culinary Institute of America.

Besides working as chef at the Mews and the Red Inn, he was a former employee of the Porthole Pub in Lynn.

He was a member of the Provincetown AIDS Support Group and Alcoholics Anonymous.

Mr. Locke leaves his parents, Richard R. and Lorraine H. of Nahant; three brothers, Michael R. of Truro, Richard M. of Malden and Joseph of Lynn; and three sisters, Judith Ann Chenail of Williamstown, Deborah H. Clement of Lawrence and Lori Ann Locke of Nahant.

A funeral Mass will be said at 10 a.m. tomorrow in St. Thomas Aquinas Church in Nahant. Burial will be in Greenlawn Cemetery, also in Nahant.

Painter Elizabeth Layton, strong backer of Gay rights, dies at 83

by Trey Graham

Elizabeth Layton, a Kansas artist whose politically charged drawings attracted national attention last year, died March 15 at the age of 83, according to The Wichita Eagle. She had suffered a stroke in February, and had developed pneumonia.

An exhibit of Layton's work at the National Museum of American Art last summer was the subject of a June review in The Washington Blade, based on the artist's stands on issues like civil rights for Gay people, funding for AIDS research, and reproductive choice.

Layton began drawing at age 68 in an effort to overcome clinical depression. Her works are direct and personal, expressing the artist's opinions in clear yet evocative ways.

In one drawing, titled "The Sneeze," Layton and her husband suffer from dreadful winter colds. In the kitchen, oranges line the counters waiting to be squeezed for fresh juice. On close inspection, it becomes evident that there are no Florida oranges in the drawing, only fruit from Texas and California — a reference to the Gay-led boycott of Florida citrus after Anita Bryant's anti-Gay campaign there. In another drawing, a self-portrait, Layton wears an assortment of activist slogan buttons, one of which reads, "Gays are people, too."

Just before her illness, "Grandma" Layton, as she signed her drawings, wrote a letter to the editor of the Salina, Kan. Journal, in which she expressed her regret that over 100 Journal readers had canceled their subscriptions after the newspaper published a wedding announcement for a Gay couple.

Elizabeth Layton's work was exhibited last year at the National Museum of American Art in D.C.

"As citizens of this country ... Gays are presently treated differently, with unequal rights, prejudice, and hatred," Layton wrote. "The issue of unequal rights is a matter for change in the law. Prejudice and hatred call for a change in heart."

"The letter really made my week," Journal Editor George Pyle told the Blade recently. "One Grandma Layton letter is worth a couple of hundred nasty ones."

Layton was survived by her husband, Glenn, as well as three daughters, a son, three stepsons, a stepdaughter, 25 grandchildren, and 26 great-grandchildren, according to The Wichita Eagle.

Christopher M. Leon

Was leasing manager; at 35
10-30-93

Christopher M. Leon of Boston, former director of leasing for LaSalle Partners Asset Management, died of complications from AIDS Saturday in his home on Beacon Hill. He was 35.

Mr. Leon, who was known as Chase, was born in San Francisco and graduated from the University of California.

He relocated to Boston in 1985 and had been leasing manager for Fidelity Properties before becoming director of leasing for LaSalle Partners Asset Management. There, his responsibilities included the leasing and management of the State Street Bank building and One Winthrop Square in Boston.

According to his companion of 10 years, Michael Anastasio of Boston, Mr. Leon retired on a disability two years ago and, "when he realized that his life had been foreshortened," became an avid traveler who frequently visited Florence, Italy, and had business cards made up that read, "Christopher Leon, Traveler."

He also leaves two sisters, Kathleen Masterson and Marlene Lewis, both of Sacramento, Calif.

Memorial services in Boston and San Francisco will be announced at a later date.

Mark R. Locher, 37; Actors' Guild Official 1-14-94

Mark Ross Locher, national communications director for the Screen Actors Guild, died on Friday at Hollywood Community Hospital in Hollywood. He was 37 and lived in Los Angeles.

The cause was AIDS, the performers' union said.

Mr. Locher, a native of Hollywood, graduated from Occidental College and earned a Master of Fine Arts degree from Northwestern University in 1980. He then joined the guild and in 1985 was named national communications director.

He also established the Screen Actors Guild Archives, a repository of photographs, papers and videotapes documenting the union's history.

He is survived by his parents, Don and Patricia Locher of Sierra Madre, Calif.; two brothers, John of Seattle, and Paul of San Diego; and a sister, Deborah Gregg of Las Vegas, Nev.

Harvey Lucas

Harvey J. Lucas, 31, of D.C., died Sunday, January 30, 1994, at his mother's Baltimore, Maryland home, of AIDS-related Kaposi's sarcoma, according to his friend, Vincent G. Carter, also of D.C.

Lucas was born May 26, 1962, in Baltimore, where he was also raised. He graduated from Southwestern Senior High School in 1980. He served in the U.S. Air Force and achieved the rank of sergeant before being honorably discharged in the spring of 1986.

After leaving the military, Lucas was hired as a binder for the Library of Congress, where he worked until retiring on disability in October 1993.

While at the library, Lucas also pursued an associate's degree in interior design at the University of the District of Columbia, graduating in December 1993.

Lucas's hobbies included writing and cooking. He was active in Us Helping Us, an HIV/AIDS organization. Lucas wrote poetry and left poems to many of his surviving friends. He was known as a skilled debater and conversationalist.

Lucas is survived by his mother, Alice C. Wattie; sister, Shannon M. Wattie, and her daughters, Shandra and Alexcia; and brother, Shawn A. Wattie, and his daughter, Shawntia Wattie; all of Baltimore; brother, Leon Lucas of D.C.; and friends, Terry Bridges, Carolyn Barksdale, and Avis Berry, all of Baltimore; Marvin Young of Laurel, Md.; George Bellinger Jr. of Brooklyn, N.Y.; Toni Williams of Texas; and John DeTaeve and Larry Davis of D.C.

Lucas's memorial service was held in D.C. on Feb. 2. His remains were buried Feb. 3 in Mount Olivet Baptist Church cemetery in Louisa County, Va., next to his grandmother's plot. Memorial donations may be made to charities helping underprivileged black children in the Baltimore area.

Donald R. Lynn

Photographer, 54

Donald R. Lynn, a photographer and fashion model, died on Sunday at his home in Manhattan. He was 54.

The cause of death was AIDS, said his companion, David Heeley.

Mr. Lynn was a catalogue model in New York in the 1960's, then turned to photography, specializing in covers for record albums. In the early 1980's he produced interview shows for public access television.

Mr. Lynn is survived by a daughter, Valerie Garret of Toledo; two brothers, Bill of Urbana, Ohio, and Joe of Rio Linda, Calif., and a sister, Ruth Lynn of Ypsilanti, Mich.

Helen J. Luedeking, 93; provided free vacations to many with AIDS

Helen Josephine (Thompson) Luedeking, who helped provide free vacations on Cape Cod to 269 persons with AIDS in the past five years, died of congestive heart failure Wednesday in her home in South Wellfleet. She was 93.

She and her friend and business partner, Rev. Ellsworth E. Koonz, an Episcopal priest, accommodated the ill as well as their loved ones in the Drummer Cove Cottages in South Wellfleet, which Mrs. Luedeking and Father Koonz bought in 1966.

"It gave her a reason to live," Father Koonz said yesterday.

The effort began when the loss of two of their friends to AIDS prompted Mrs. Luedeking and Father Koonz to ask the AIDS Action Committee of Massachusetts to invite people with acquired immune deficiency syndrome to stay in their nine housekeeping cottages during the off-season.

Before long, people with AIDS were also coming in July and August for what one guest called "the restorative effect of a change of scene."

Another guest, a 6-year-old boy who arrived with his dog, exclaimed: "No more needles for a whole week!"

"They were generous in providing this respite and loving companionship," Christina Crowe, deputy executive director of the AIDS Action Committee, said of Mrs. Luedeking and Father Koonz. "They were more concerned with making a contribution in the face of this epidemic than they were with making money."

Mrs. Luedeking and her partner were among the 17 persons honored as "unsung heroes" in January by the AIDS Action Committee.

Born in Fort Wayne, Ind., she graduated from Fort Wayne Normal School and attended Washington University in St. Louis.

A lifelong Democrat, Mrs. Luedeking served on the Lafayette City Council in Indiana. In 1968, she introduced Eugene McCarthy to a presidential campaign audience of 6,000 at Purdue University.

After moving to Cape Cod in 1972, she became chairwoman of the social action committee of the Church of the Holy Spirit, in Orleans. In 1977, she opened the chapel in her home to Friday morning Eucharists.

Her husband, Carl C. Luedeking, died in 1943. She leaves two sons, Robert of Pullman, Wash., and William of Laguna Hills, Calif.; a daughter, Mary Hession of Sarasota, Fla.; 17 grandchildren; and 11 great-grandchildren.

A funeral Mass will be said at 11 a.m. Tuesday in the Church of St. Mary of the Harbor, Provincetown.

LARKIN—Of Brockton, June 3, Raymond G., age 41, companion of Timothy Bowker of Brockton. Son of Richard and Marian (O'Shea) Larkin of Falls Church, Va. Brother of Maryanne Shovestol of Delaware. Maureen Davis of Falls Church, Va. Mary Alicia McNeeley and Mary Patricia Haag both of Va. Richard J. of No. Providence, R.I. Roger Russell, Ronald, and Robert all of Va. Funeral Services will be held in the Unity Church, 13 Main St., North Easton on Tuesday at 2:30 p.m. Visiting hours Monday 2-4 and 7-9 p.m. at the Farley Funeral Home, 358 Park St., (Rte. 27) STOUGHTON.

L'HEUREUX—Of Salem and Oakland Park, Fla. Roger N. L'Heureux, age 49 of 313 Essex St., Salem. Son of the late Donat and Alice (Leblanc) L'Heureux, step son of Marie Anna L'Heureux, father of Sharon M. and Michael R. L'Heureux. Funeral Saturday at 10 A.M. in the Murphy Funeral Home, 85 Federal St. (cor. of Rte. 114, exit 25A from Rte. 128), SALEM. Relatives and friends are respectfully invited to attend. Visiting hours Friday 6-9 P.M. Interment in Walnut Grove Cemetery, Danvers. Those who wish may make memorial contributions to the AIDS Action Committee, 13 Clarendon St., Boston, MA or the Strongest Link, 16 South Main St., Topsfield, MA 01983. 2-22-94

Brian W. Lundrigan

Brian W. (Cookie) Lundrigan, 21 years old, died with his mother by his side on Nov. 23 at Medical Center Hospital of Vermont in Burlington.

Brian was born in Rutland, Vermont on March 24, 1972. The son of William and Angela (Muro) Lundrigan. He was a student at Emerson College, a lighting and stage technician for the Charles Playhouse, and member of the Boston Alliance of Gay and Lesbian Youth (BAGLY).

He is survived by his parents, brother Keith and sister Jennifer, as well as many friends in the Boston Area.

During the two years Cookie lived in Boston we came to appreciate his incredible creativity and enthusiasm for living.

Cookie enjoyed dancing, socializing until the early hours of the morning, and performing. He was especially proud of his theater work. One of the highlights of his career was working with Imogene Coca and Sid Cesar at the Charles Playhouse in the play, "Together Again."

We will always remember Cookie's courage and spirit, while living with his illness. His life is an inspiration for everyone who knew him.

Plans for a memorial service to celebrate his life will be announced soon. Please call Jessica at 868-8495 for information.

Michael Labance, 35, publisher of the Philadelphia, Pa., Gay paper Au Courant, died on Feb. 6 in Philadelphia of AIDS complications. Labance founded the first Gay student group at Pennsylvania State University while attending. He left his position as sales representative at the Philadelphia Gay News in 1982 to cofound Au Courant, a paper he aimed to be "more objective and more inclusive," Au Courant editor Scott Mallinger said. A memorial service will be held today, Feb. 11, in Philadelphia. Survivors include his partner of 13 years, Joseph Youkana-vitch of Philadelphia.

Barry A. Locke

Barry A. Locke, 27, of Randolph passed away at his home on Jan. 27 of complications due to AIDS. He was the owner of Barry Alan Catering Solutions which he founded in 1988.

Born in Randolph, he graduated from Randolph High School in 1984 and Johnson-Wales College Culinary school in 1988, where he also served as a teaching assistant. Mr. Locke was also the former head chef of Camp Avoda in Middleboro, MA, and Banquet Chef of the Marriot Hotel, San Francisco.

Mr. Locke was past president of United Synagogue Youth at Temple Beth Am, Randolph, and was a member of The Speaker's Bureau of the AIDS Action Committee. In that capacity Mr. Locke spoke about AIDS awareness at the Randolph schools and at Temple Beth Am U.S.Y., where The Barry A. Locke Award was established this year to honor a U.S.Y. member who shows outstanding outreach to the community.

In March of 1993 the Locke family sponsored a brunch for 450 friends and relatives at Lombardos Restaurant in Randolph that raised $21,000 for AIDS. This past year for the AIDS walk Barry and his family were featured on Channel 4 and Boston Cablevision. "Team Locke" was able to raise $10,000.

He is survived by parents Marcia and Melvin Locke of Randolph, his brothers Evan and Michael of Boston, his grandparents Sara and William Feinberg of FL, and Helen Cohen of Sharon and his companion Wayne Vanier.

Services were held Jan. 30 in Randolph. Arrangements were by the Brezniak-Rodman Chapel, West Newton.

James Grayson Lockwood

May 21, 1949–Dec. 9, 1993

Jim's irresistible energy blew him out of Kansas early and landed him (after New York, Los Angeles and the Coast Guard) in San Francisco in the early '70s. Jim never missed the big events, and soon he was playing the glockenspiel in the original Gay Freedom Day Marching Band and Twirling Corps.

Jim packed a sharp and comic tongue, was an inspired party giver and cook, a skillful gardener and a consummate shopper, and he could give a credible reading of Chopin or Joplin on the piano. He had a love of water and sun and, when drained by city life, would recharge on the hot white rocks of the Yuba River. When residing on Kauai he honed his flower arranging skills (favoring in flowers, as elsewhere, the exuberant, the exotic and the colossal).

Jim tested positive early on, took his medications and had a remarkably long period of good health. After retiring from Orrick, Herrington, Jim traveled twice to Europe and four times to Asia (to Bangkok, Singapore, Bali and Tioman, where he had his portrait painted — twice).

Jim leaves two pianos, a highly polished rocket car, family and many friends who will miss and love him always. ▼

Joseph Lodie; 38; AIDS activist, Boston schools health educator

By Tom Long
GLOBE STAFF

Services will be held today for Joseph (Jay) G. Lodie of Boston, an AIDS activist, health educator and marathon swimmer, who died of complications from AIDS Sunday in his mother's home in Melrose. He was 38.

Mr. Lodie had been coordinator for comprehensive health education and support service initiatives for the Boston public schools for 15 years. He instructed high-risk urban youth on AIDS awareness, pregnancy prevention, substance abuse and violence prevention.

After retiring because of illness in 1991, he continued to work as a volunteer speaker, educator and AIDS activist and was a strong advocate of condom distribution in public schools.

He traveled and spoke throughout the state for Planned Parenthood's Heart to heart Program, introducing himself to public school children as a person with AIDS.

Mr. Lodie was born in Melrose. He graduated from Northeastern University's School of Public Health and earned a master's degree in education administration at Lesley College.

In a 1992 Globe interview, he said: "I felt I was protected because I was married. . . everyone in Boston was saying you can only get it if you went to New York or San Francisco. Denial in the gay community was very high."

In 1991, he coordinated Pro Visions II, a conference on HIV and AIDS for health care and education professionals sponsored by Rhode Island Project AIDS.

He was keynote speaker for the AIDS Action Committee Walk for Life in 1992 and participated in the walk with 50 friends and relatives, including four generations of his family. The group wore tee shirts emblazoned with "Team Lodie."

Mr. Lodie was also a competitive marathon swimmer, who placed first in the 1978 United Way Two-mile Swim and the Boston Harbor Marathon Swim. He was a member of the New England Marathon Swimmers and New England Masters.

He was also a member of Dignity Boston, a group of gay Catholics. In the Globe interview, he said he felt it was "very important to have some sense of faith and belief. I feel God gave me opportunities earlier in life because he knew I was checking out early. He gave me opportunities and he gave me the will and strength to continue."

"Dying doesn't concern me," he added. "It's the daily deterioration, the days when you get out of bed feeling hung over and you haven't had a drink, when a fungus infection makes you gag, the low-grade fever, the sensory overload you get in the supermarket. You go to a funeral a month and you know you're going to die of the same thing they did."

"I have put my affairs in order," he continued. "My family has nothing to worry about. My funeral is paid for. I have established a trust fund for Gus, my Irish wolfhound. He has been my faithful companion."

Mr. Lodie leaves his mother, Louise (Mutti) of Melrose; three brothers, Peter Lodi of Ashfield, Paul Lodi of Jackson, N.H., and Robert Lodie of Los Angeles; and three sisters, Maryann Hollis of Melrose, Elizabeth Sustick of Northampton, and Lisa O'Loughlin of Melrose.

A celebration of his life will be held at noon in J.S. Waterman & Sons-Eastman Waring Funeral Home in Boston. Burial will be in Wwoming Cemetery in Melrose.

John Marshall Lusk
Sept. 18, 1957 - June 4, 1994

John passed away peacefully from AIDS on June 4 at St. Mary's Hospital. He'd been a resident of San Francisco since 1978. John grew up in Lakeland, Fla., where he was active in drama and music. He will be remembered by many for his baritone voice.

For many years John worked at Max's Opera Cafe on Van Ness Ave. as a singing waiter. He is survived by his sisters, Sandra and Connie; brother, Jim; and Michael, his twin.

John was grateful to the following friends: Pete Rosenfeld, Alfred Wilkenson and Joe Clements. Very special thanks to the staff of the Care Unit at St. Mary's. Contributions may be made to the AIDS Emergency Fund and Project Open Hand.

We will always remember you John, for your sarcastic wit and artistic unconditional love. ▼

LAMONT—Wesley F., 41, died on 2/25/96, of AIDS complications. Senior Producer/McCann Erickson Worldwide; avid gardener; chief extraordinaire; a lover of serenity; the consummate gentleman. Survived by his partner of 15 years, Jim Gildoy; parents, Warren and Adeline Lamont; brothers, Warren Jr. and Wayne; sister, Wendy Lamont Woolbright; five nieces, and a worldwide circle of friends and colleagues. Special thanks to all who cared for Wesley in his final weeks. His grace and courage in living with HIV inspired us all. Memorial service to be announced at a later date.

Debbie Lieberman, 42, and her son, Ben, 5, of Cambridge walked in memory of Ben's adoptive father, Rich, who died two years ago. 6-3-94

"I know someone who died from AIDS," Ben said. "This is the first year that I was on the AIDS walk."

The walk is a celebration of life, but it also prompted memories of a loved one who died at 42.

Jeffrey Lew

Dec. 1, 1949-Jan. 29, 1994

Jeffrey was a fighter who taught us about courage in the face of life's most difficult challenges. Despite his failing health, he never complained and always had a smile, a kind word, and a place in his heart for the problems of others.

He was a selfless, dependable and caring friend whose compassion for others was matched by his own determination to face his illness and the many challenges it presented. He was a gentle, generous, fun-loving man who enjoyed good Chinese food, movies, 49er games, mahjong and quiet walks on the beach.

Jeffrey was born in Hong Kong and moved to Sacramento with his family. He relocated to San Francisco about 10 years ago. Jeffrey spent his last few weeks in the loving care of Coming Home Hospice. He was the son of Hung Ding Lew and Sun Lim Tam and is survived by his sister, Yonette Law of Sacramento. He will be missed by his friends from Shanti and GAPA. A service will be held at Golden Gate Metropolitan Community Church, 1600 Clay Street, on Saturday, February 12, at 1 p.m. ▼

OUR SON DIED OF AIDS

I am writing to tell you how much I enjoyed your article, "My Brother Died of AIDS: Jeanne Cotter's Story," in your December issue.

We, too, lost a very special person to AIDS. Our youngest son Thomas died on St. Patrick's Day 1992 at the age of 30. We cared for him in our home for the last five years of his life, with loving support and help from close friends and Sutter Hospice in Sacramento.

My wife and I can relate to the ordeal, the ups and downs that the Cotter family experienced. I truly admire Jeanne's gift of love and the sharing of her special gift of music with her brother. This had to be very special for him, his parents and countless friends.

We had a similar relationship with Tom. Although not gifted musically, I composed poems to share with others, some with Tom, before his passing. I call my first collection, "Speaking From the Heart." Knowing how pleased Tom was with my effort to help make life more pleasant for others, I plan to finish another collection in March.

You and Jeanne have done a great service by publishing this story! I've read many articles and stories concerning AIDS victims. This is truly one of the best because of its uplifting spirit, its clear demonstration of understanding, acceptance and compassion. We, too, believe in leaving the judgment to God.

Articles like yours help to remove the stigma and ill feelings that people in general have toward those suffering from the HIV virus, with no cure in sight. Perhaps someday, with God's help, a cure will be found for this deadly disease.

John William Lancaster

March 16, 1944 -
June 27, 1993

John Lancaster passed away last June at the home of his parents in Stuart, Florida.

Born in Bronxville, N.Y., John had been a long-time resident of the Hollywood area and later of Venice. His auto restoration and woodrefinishing business, Lancaster Refinishing, served many of L.A.'s prestigious automobile and antique owners.

He is survived only by his mother, Mrs. William F. Lancaster, and friends.

John's outgoing personality and friendly laugh won him friends from all walks of life.

Ronald Lamontagne

On Feb. 8, Ron Lamontagne, known to his friends as "Missy," passed away after a courageous battle with AIDS.

Born in Chicopee, Mass., he graduated from Chicopee High School, attended Wellesley School of Floral Design, graduating with honors and received an award for excellence.

A well-known florist in Boston he worked for various florists in Boston, including Winston's, Hoffman's and in Harvard Sq. He also did many parties decorating nightclubs like Chaps and Sporters during holiday seasons.

For two years in a row Ron received an Award of Best Exhibit at the Boston Flower Show. This brought more acclaim to his work.

Besides being a florist he also worked for nightclubs, such as Darts and Sporters. He was well known among bar businesses and touched many a heart.

Upon his move to Portland, Maine, he obtained his dream come true by opening, "Ravens," a dance club and bar. While in Maine he became president of the "Harbour Masters," and brought many a happy time to its members.

Being a free spirit, Ron touched many lives and always brought a ray of sunshine to cheer up any mundane moment. He will be missed by all those who knew him.

Services were held at Saint Pierre Funeral Home in Chicopee, MA. Donations are requested to be sent to AIDS Action Committee in Boston in Ron's name.

John Patrick Lovelace

Dec. 9, 1951 - Feb. 12, 1994

John was a man who lived a full life in half a lifetime. As a child John dreamed of owning his own airline. He left San Diego for NYC after two years of college to pursue a career in the airline industry and experience his chosen lifestyle. He transferred to San Francisco, where he lived until he returned to San Diego for his final weeks of life.

His unique knowledge of travel and of the world along with his wry sense of humor made him good company and a welcome guest on five continents. The last years of his life were spent battling AIDS and doing all he could to educate people in both the gay and straight communities so that more people might be spared this unjust curse.

John was predeceased by his younger brother, Paul, also an AIDS victim. He is survived by his parents, Edwin and Patricia Lovelace; his brother, Chris; sisters, Mary, Therese, Joan and Patty; as well as 13 nieces and nephews. His family is forever grateful for the love and support of his friends and support groups in the Bay Area, who enriched his life to the very end.

Michael B. Linn

February 26, 1994

Michael died peacefully Saturday night, February 26, at 10:15, after a short stay at Mt. Zion in San Francisco. His loving mother, Mary Ann Linn of Banks, Ore., and two close friends, Rick M. Godlove and Paul W. Motter, were at his side.

He is also survived by his brothers, John of Banks and Peter of Sacramento, as well as his father.

The essence of Mike was his love of nature, which was a total part of him. He lived to explore the mountains, walk the creeks and watch the sunsets. A leaf from a tree was as important as a great painting, and a rock would become a beautiful sculpture. The shadow of a tree could put him into a trance. He loved San Francisco and made it his home since 1967. He explored it like a character out of Tales of the City. He did not make small talk and was considered to be quiet, but when he talked about something, his messages were profound. We will miss him. ▼

Mr. Lovinger served in the Army for several years.

He is survived by two daughters, Joanna of Los Angeles and Margot of Boston; a brother, Eugene of Philadelphia; and an aunt, Amy of the Bronx.

A celebration of his life will be held at 4 p.m. tomorrow at the Celestial Chapel of the J.S. Waterman & Son-Eastman Waring Funeral Home, Boston.

Michael Anthony LeBlanc

June 13, 1959 - April 21, 1994

Mike was born in San Antonio, Texas, in the home of his parents, Roy and Mary Rhodes. After the death of his father, he was adopted by Robert LeBlanc. He died peacefully in his sleep in the home of his sister and brother-in-law, Veronica and Terry Burley, of Molalla, Oregon.

Mike is survived by a daughter who lives in Seattle; his mother, Mary Brewer of Newberg, Oregon; his grandmother, Mary Adamson of McMinnville, Oregon; sisters, Charlene Conn of McMinnville and Jane Albin of Salem, Oregon, as well as Veronica; his brothers, Roy and Virgil LeBlanc of Clear Lake, California, and John and Elijah Anderson of Newberg; and 13 nieces and nephews.

He will be missed by this large and loving family as well as by friends in the San Francisco Bay Area. Special thanks are due to the staffs and the volunteers of the Pete Claver Community and of Laguna Honda Hospital. Their care made Mike's life much more pleasant. But he was filled with joy when he heard that he was going home to his family in Oregon. It meant a great deal to him to spend his final months there with his loved ones.

Memorial services were held in Molalla on Tuesday evening, April 26. Go with God, Mike. ▼

Joseph Lopez Jr., 15, Co-Author Of Book on Coping With Illness

4-28-94

By ERIC PACE

Joseph Luis Lopez Jr., a co-author of "I Will Sing Life: Voices From the Hole in the Wall," an award-winning book by and about children with life-threatening medical problems, died on Thursday at his family home in Jersey City, N.J. He was 15.

He died of AIDS after being in a coma for two weeks, said his stepmother, Susan Lopez. The youth liked to call himself Joe Louis Lopez, after the boxer Joe Louis.

Dr. Howard A. Pearson, a professor of pediatrics at Yale Medical School, said Joe had been H.I.V. positive since birth.

"He was a fighter and was fighting for life really up until the very end," said Dr. Pearson, who is also the medical director of the Hole in the Wall Gang Camp, a camp for children with cancer and other life-threatening diseases in Ashford, in northeastern Connecticut.

Joe was at the camp for the last three summers. He collaborated on the 206-page book, published by Little, Brown in 1992, with six other campers — ages 7 to 19 and suffering from various illnesses — and with two camp counselors, Larry Berger and Dahlia Lithwick.

'You Have to Beat It'

"H.I.V. is nothing," Joe said in the book. "It's just a virus. It's just like being sick for a long time, for always. I say, put on your gloves and fight 'em, go 10 rounds. You have to beat it. But some people, they're scared, they just say, 'Nah, I can't beat it, I can't.' They don't care about themselves because they think they're dying. I got nothing to talk about dying. I ain't dying yet."

"I Will Sing Life," which has an introduction by the actor Paul Newman, the camp's founder and president, won awards from the New York Public Library and the National Association for the Care of Children's Health. It has been published in Denmark and Germany.

The youth was born in Hoboken, N.J., moved to Jersey City in 1987 and graduated last year from P.S. 27 in Jersey City. At his death he was in the ninth grade at Emerson High School in Union City, N.J.

His mother, Lucy Santos Lopez, who passed the virus to her son at birth, died in 1986 of AIDS, Susan Lopez said.

In addition to his stepmother, the former Susan Fallo, he is survived by his father, Joseph Luis Lopez of Jersey City; two brothers, Charles and Matthew, also of Jersey City; his four grandparents, Tomas and Martha Santos of Hoboken, Maria Miranda of Union City, N.J., and Luis Medina of Jersey City; and a step-grandmother, Barbara Fallo of Hoboken.

Kyle Anthony Lee

Kyle Anthony Lee of New York City died on July 6 of complications related to AIDS. Born on June 28, 1959, he was a native of Dallas. He lived in Boston for six years, working for the greater part of that time as the Maitre d' at Aujourd'hui in The Four Seasons Hotel. He moved to New York in 1989 to become the Food and Beverage Director at The Regency Hotel.

Diagnosed with HIV in 1987, Kyle was a long-term survivor of AIDS whose courage and optimism inspired and sustained many. A free-lance writer at the time of his death, he devoted his writing skills to the struggle against AIDS and the fight for gay and lesbian rights.

He leaves his lover and companion, Robert Mower; his parents, James Lee and Frances Penniston; his brothers, Daniel and Mark; his sisters, Hallie and Lisa; and many, many friends. He will be deeply missed by all who knew him.

There will be no funeral service.

Harold G. Lind Jr.

July 12, 1994

Harold G. "Spike" Lind Jr., an artist and graphic designer, died July 12 at Alta Bates Hospital in Berkeley. He was 50 and lived in Lafayette, Calif.

Between the late '70s and early '80s, Mr. Lind was a graphic designer in Los Angeles, associated with the studio of Charles and Ray Eames. He was a member of the design team that created the museum exhibition, "The World of Franklin and Jefferson." During the '80s, as a graphic designer with the Palo Alto firm, Jack Morgan & Associates, he executed designs for various projects undertaken by the Oakland-based World Airways. He attended the Art Center College of Design in Pasadena and was a cartographer in Japan for the U.S. Army.

Survivors include his mother, Carol of Lafayette; a sister, Susan Chastain of San Francisco; and his brothers and their families, Tom, Karen, Briana and Ray Lind of Seattle and Jim Lind and Lisa Pattison of Salem, Ore. A memorial gathering will be held at the family home in Lafayette on Sunday, July 17. Donations are suggested to the AIDS Project of Contra Costa, 2280 Diamond Blvd., Suite 350, Concord, Calif.

Angelus Lisotta

March 25, 1959 - Sept. 30, 1994

Angelus Lisotta, former restaurant manager at Zuni and Aqua, died on September 30 at St. Mary's Hospital. The cause of death was complications from AIDS. He was 35.

Angelus was born in Beacon, Dutchess County, New York. After graduation from high school, he enlisted in the United States Navy. Upon his discharge, he attended the Culinary Institute of America in Hyde Park, NY, where he received his degree. Prior to his moving to San Francisco in 1983, he lived in Florida. In San Francisco, his career path took him to some of the city's finest dining establishments. He worked at Stars and, for five years, at Campton Place under Bradley Ogden. He left Campton Place to become manager at Zuni. From Zuni, he took the manager position at Aqua, which he helped open to four-star reviews. He also worked with Spectrum Foods and at Bizou.

Survivors include his parents, Larry and Suzanne of Garrison, New York; and two brothers, Marcellus, of Tempe, Arizona; and Damien, of Garrison. Donations may be made in Angelus' memory to the AIDS Emergency Fund or St. Mary's. ▼

From the Books "Voices THAT CARE"

ONE of the PRIMARY ways the AIDS virus is TRANSMITTED is from mother to child. Many of these children ARE LATER ABANDONED OR ORPHANED. WHAT HAPPENS TO THEM? WHERE do they go? WHO TAKES CARE OF THEM.

People like LORETTA AND THOMAS LICK do. In addition to their 5 children AND 2 GRAND children, the Licks have a family of FOSTER children w/ AIDS. They RECENTLY adopted 2 of the children, a brother AND SISTER named Tommy AND Ashley. LORETTA 46 AND THOMAS 55, have LOST ABOUT 15 of their FOSTER children to AIDS. Tommy was 3 1/2 yrs old when he died, His sister Ashley APOPE was 5 AT THIS TIME the yr WAS 1970 AND 1992.

HIV revenge killer dies

LONDON—Michael Lupo, a serial killer who strangled four gay men in revenge after he contracted HIV, died in February from AIDS complications. Lupo, who was gay, went on an eight-week killing spree in 1986, having sex with men in abandoned buildings and mutilating their bodies. He was also convicted of two attempted murders and was sentenced to life in prison, Reuters reported.

Manfred Langer, 44, a celebrated figure in the Amsterdam Gay community, died of cancer Nov. 21. Langer, who was best known for throwing wild parties attended by flamboyant characters, founded the iT discotheque in 1989. On Nov. 25, 1,000 people bid farewell to Langer, whose remains were transported to the cemetery in a pink coffin and a pink limousine.

AIDS activist Lori Levine, 35, died Nov. 11 due to complications from AIDS. One of the first women in Los Angeles to publicly acknowledge her HIV status, Levine founded the Women Being Alive newsletter and received a lifetime achievement award from the Los Angeles city AIDS coordinator on World AIDS Day 1993. 94

Ri Lovell

Riland Harold Lovell Jr., 46, of Staunton, Virginia, died Monday, July 11, 1994 of HIV related complications at his sister's home in Manassas, Virginia, according to his friend, Keith Webb of Somerdale, New Jersey.

Lovell was born in Richlands, Va. and graduated from Hurley High School in Hurley, Va. He attended Pikeville College in Pikeville, Ky. during the late 1960s. He then went to work for the federal government, ending his 29 year employment there in September 1993 when he left the Department of Housing and Urban Development in D.C. to go on disability. Lovell was a supervisory manager analyst at HUD.

"Riland's devotion to his career was greatly admired by all," said Webb.

Lovell's hobbies included classical music, theater, classic movies, collectibles, and antique furniture.

In addition to Webb, Lovell is survived by his mother, Pauline Looney Lovell of Richlands; sisters, Sharon Lovell and Robin Beverlin of Manassas; sister, Brenda Walters of Centreville, Va.; brothers, Gary and Terrence of Richlands; Gregory of Roseann, Va.; and Timothy Lovell of Charlottesville, Va.

A memorial service was held July 15 in Arlington, Va. Lovell's remains were cremated.

Molly G. Lawrence

Dec. 11, 1908 - May 5, 1995

Our dear friend Molly passed away recently at Mt. Zion Hospital from a brain hemorrhage at age 86.

Born in Wellesley, Mass., Molly grew up in Chicago and Louisville. She received her B.S. in chemistry from the University of Michigan, and was a retired pharmacological researcher and medical copywriter. She will be missed by her many friends in Noe Valley, where she lived for the past 18 years.

A great friend of the gay community, Molly was philanthropically involved with many gay- and AIDS-related organizations. She was a rescuer of stray cats and a happy, friendly and independent woman until the day before her death.

Molly is survived by her nieces, Joie Hubbert of San Francisco and Alice Forbes of Seattle; her grandniece, Wendy Forbes; and two grandnephews, Bryan and Barry Forbes, also of Seattle.

In lieu of flowers, donations may be sent to the SF Gay Men's Chorus, Visiting Nurses and Hospice, or the SF AIDS Foundation.

A memorial service open to all of Molly's friends will be held on June 9 at 4 p.m. at Bethany United Methodist Church, Clipper and Sanchez sts., San Francisco. ▼ former San Francisco Health Commissioner Pierre R. Ludington died at his home Thursday, July 14, of AIDS-related complications. He was 49.

An openly gay member of the Health Commission, appointed in 1990 by former Mayor Art Agnos, Ludington resigned from the commission April 19, due to deteriorating health.

Pierre R. Ludington

At that time he drew accolades from President Bill Clinton, San Francisco supervisors, Mayor Frank Jordan, and his fellow commissioners.

Family members and close friends were with him at the time of his death, which was described by associates as "peaceful."

Commissioner Ludington served on the Health Commission for four years, acting as chair of the Joint Conference on Community Public Health AIDS and Emergency Medical Services.

Ludington served as executive director of the American Association of Physicians for Human Rights, a national association of gay and lesbian physicians. He served on the Mayor's HIV Planning Council, the HIV Research Advisory Committee of Kaiser Hospital in the city, the Prevention Advisory Committee of the AIDS Office and the Community Task Force of the Sixth International AIDS Conference.

Ludington was founder of "Positives Being Positive," a peer support group for HIV-infected people. He developed and supervised the group's educational program, "Living with HIV."

A leading AIDS advocate, Ludington also promoted a department-wide approach to collaboration, integration, and consolidation of a comprehensive health care system for San Francisco.

In an interview with this reporter at the time of his resignation, Ludington expressed the hope that Mayor Jordan would appoint another HIV-positive person to replace him. He got his dying wish.

Among the many who expressed their sorrow at Ludington's passing was the man named to replace him on the commission, Mike Shriver. Shriver, executive director of Mobilization against AIDS, was sworn in as a member of the San Francisco Health Commission, replacing Ludington, on June 29.

"I'm very saddened by Pierre's death," Shriver said. "When I first tested HIV-positive in 1989, Pierre stepped in to show me how to navigate the HIV service system, to make sure I got taken care of. I am very moved to have been named to his seat on the Health Commission. I feel an extra pressure to maintain the level of commitment to the fight against HIV and AIDS that Pierre exemplified."

"Pierre was a remarkable man," Shriver continued. "He did a ton of work for people with HIV and AIDS, especially for their civil rights and human dignity. Pierre's death is a significant loss for us in San Francisco."

Health Commission President Arthur Jackson also expressed his deep regret at Ludington's death. "Commissioner Ludington was deeply committed to the right of everyone to health care access. In the last year, Commissioner Ludington showed a great deal of personal courage in serving the city in spite of his frail health," Jackson said.

Dr. Sandra Hernandez, Director of Public Health, a long-time friend and colleague of Ludington, also expressed her sense of loss, both personal and professional.

"Pierre provided leadership in the consolidation of the Department of Public Health service contracts, and advocated that better services could be provided to clients if agencies worked more closely together," Hernandez told the B.A.R. "While he was a strong supporter of services for all persons infected with HIV, he had been especially concerned about health services provided for children and youth. He always took the perspective of persons using the services of the health department and helped to shape San Francisco as a world renowned model of AIDS service delivery.

"He will be greatly missed for his passionate advocacy for all of the clients we serve."

Supervisor Susan Leal called Ludington "an incredible advocate for our public health system and children's health issues. His interest and concern went well beyond his activism in the field of AIDS and HIV."

"We've really suffered a great loss," she added.

Mayor Jordan said, "It is with sadness that I offer my condolences on behalf of the city of San Francisco upon hearing of the untimely death of Pierre Ludington. Pierre was a dedicated public servant, deeply committed to health care issues, especially HIV/AIDS concerns."

"As Health Commissioner, Pierre made an invaluable contribution to the promotion of a comprehensive health care system for the city. His strong advocacy, solid leadership and innovative spirit will be sorely missed."

Supervisor Carole Migden, who read a resolution praising Ludington at the time of his resignation, told the B.A.R., "We mourn his passing, we appreciate his many years of service to the health commission and the people of San Francisco. We hope to continue to be vigilant to the issues of HIV as well as responsible health care to the people of this city."

Ludington's family said they plan to hold a public memorial service in the near future. ▼

James N. Lombardo

Aryae Lawrence Levy

March 10, 1953 - August 15, 1994

Aryae Lawrence Levy passed away on August 15 with his sisters at his bedside in his Noe Valley home. A native of Boston, Aryae was an extensive world traveller with a love for people and a zest for life. He was a pioneer in creating special social events for gays and promoting gay travel clubs both locally and internationally.

Aryae was an enthusiastic entrepreneur, developing several unique businesses that represented his diverse interests. One of his original undertakings was GOA - Great Outdoor Adventures. Two notable GOA event highlights were Gay Night at Great America in 1981 and Gay Night at the Circus. His circus event was the first benefit held for two noteworthy organizations - the Kaposi's Sarcoma Foundation, the forerunner to many of San Francisco's AIDS organizations, and the first Gay Olympics, later to become the Gay Games.

Aryae's painting company, Concepts in Color, was responsible for beautifying many San Francisco Victorian homes. During his 12-year career as a painting contractor, Aryae also developed many other enterprises, including GOA Travel and Camp Never Never Land. He spent his early years in the City as a manager of a sporting goods store and as a sales representative which taught him basic business skills. But it was his unique, insightful, high-energy style that made his ventures so successful.

Aryae was a respected civic leader who always found time to be involved in the community and to help others. He served for many years on the boards of the Golden Gate Business Association (GGBA) and MAX, directing both of their social events committees. In 1991, he was the recipient of the GGBA Members Service Award. He helped form the International Gay Outdoors Club Network; and also the International Gay and Lesbian Travel Association.

Aryae's great enthusiasm for nature, exploration and entertaining touched and changed many lives. He actively supported numerous causes to promote gay and lesbian rights and to combat AIDS and HIV disease. Living for many years with HIV, he strove successfully to make the most of each day, accomplishing more in his 41 years than most twice his age. He will be remembered for his twinkling eyes, wonderful smile, love of laughter and ability to bring people together.

He is survived by his parents, Sydney and Phyllis Levy; his sisters, Ellen and Nancy Levy; his nephew, Micah Jose Levy, all of Boston, and an extensive family of friends.

Aryae lived fully, with boundless energy. He was an inspiration to many people, most of whom supported him lovingly through his final days. He was a man of strength, generosity, and great courage. He passed away as he lived, with dignity and love.

A private memorial service is scheduled. Donations in Aryae's memory may be made to Shanti Project.

Tom Lambert

Thomas J. Lambert, 51, of Gaithersburg, Maryland, died Sunday, September 4, 1994 of AIDS-related complications at the Shady Grove Adventist Hospital in Rockville, Maryland, according to his partner in life, William Duvall Jr., also of Gaithersburg.

Lambert was born in Saginaw, Mich., on May 5, 1943. He graduated from Arthur Hill High School in Saginaw in 1960 and attended Ferris State University in Big Rapids, Mich.

Lambert lost his hearing after a bout with spinal meningitis when he was a year old, said Duvall. As an adult, Lambert was very active in the deaf community in Saginaw. He was involved with the Valley Organization for Improved Community and Equality for the Speech and Hearing Impaired and the National Fraternal Society of the Deaf, and he founded the Tri-Cities Association of the Deaf.

While in Michigan, Lambert worked in the Chevrolet Parts Plant from 1977-1981. He was the 1977 recipient of General Motor's Gold Medal Award for Excellence in Community Activities. Lambert also worked at the Caro Regional Mental Health Facility, where he helped develop programs for children who are deaf.

In 1988, Lambert moved to the D.C. area to attend Gallaudet University, majoring in art history. He founded the "Never Too Late Club" for adults continuing their education at Gallaudet. From 1991-94, Lambert was a sign language teacher at Montgomery Community College in Rockville, Md.

Lambert was also a talented artist who produced beautiful oil paintings and an active member of the Open Door Metropolitan Community Church in Boyds, Md., said Duvall.

"Tom was dedicated to bridging the gap between the hearing and the deaf communities," said his friend Allen Jacobs of Rockville.

In addition to Duvall, Lambert is survived by his mother, Cecilia Lambert; a son, Christopher Lambert; a daughter, Elizabeth Kaul, all of Saginaw; two sisters, Sue Lambert of Reese, Mich.; and Jane Stubstad of Gwinn, Mich.; and three brothers, Jerry Lambert of Germany; John Lambert of Chicago, Ill.; and Paul Lambert of Saginaw.

Kevin Marc Larrabee

Dec. 6, 1951 - Jan. 12, 1995

Kevin died peacefully at Mt. Zion Hospital at 3:35 a.m. on January 12. He was sent on his journey "Home" by his loving partner, Larry Bittner.

Kevin was born in Iowa and grew up in Southern California. His 18-year career with Pacific Bell was a source of pride and joy to him. Kevin was a talented musician; he played the piano, flute and oboe, and loved gospel music, opera and plays/musicals.

In addition to his partner, Kevin is survived by his mother, Margaret; three older brothers; many aunts, uncles and cousins; and his "extended family," including among others too numerous to mention, Kathy, Beth and Jessica, Eric, Paul, John, David, Joyce, Freddie, Larry C. and Blayne and Joe. A memorial service will be held at Kevin's church, MCC/SF, 150 Eureka Street, January 21, 11 a.m. In lieu of flowers, contributions to the MCC AIDS/HIV Ministry will be appreciated.

"In a world with so few heroes, you showed the universe the way - the way to truth and bravery, each ... each and every day" R.I.P. dear Kevin. ▼

Stephen Fisk Lowell

May 11, 1941 - May 20, 1993

Steve Lowell, 52, co-founder of Paperback Traffic Bookstores in San Francisco, has died at Ojai, California, of AIDS.

Born of a pioneer family in Fresno, California, he graduated from UC Berkeley. He was active in the Gay Liberation Movement before opening the West's first predominantly gay bookstore on Castro Street in 1972 with Donn Tatum.

Finding politics inadequate, Steve became a student of the Tibetan Buddhist meditation master Chogyam Trungpa, Rinpoche, helping found the San Francisco Dharmadhatu meditation center. He continued practicing and teaching the buddhadharma until his death.

Steve moved to Los Angeles in 1982 to study interior design at UCLA and worked in that field, including at Columbia Pictures. After being diagnosed he served on the Spiritual Advisory Council of AIDS Project Los Angeles and did hospice and prison work for PWAs.

Steve moved to Ojai in 1993 to be given care by his Buddhist friends there. His death was essentially peaceful, and he was able to maintain his meditation practice, which is very auspicious. His ashes were taken to the Rocky Mountain Dharma Center in Colorado.

He is survived by his longtime lover, Donn Tatum of Ojai, and brother, Jeffrey Lowell of Oakland. ▼

William D. Lovelady

March 1, 1995

Bill passed peacefully of AIDS March 1 in San Francisco, attended by his devoted niece, Janie, and close friends.

A native of eastern Oregon and a San Francisco resident since 1963, Bill was senior vice president at the Workers' Compensation Insurance Rating Bureau. He enjoyed life in our community, traveled frequently, especially to Laguna Beach, and resided for a short time in San Juan, Puerto Rico.

Donations in Bill's memory may be made to the AIDS charity of one's choice. A reception in his memory will be held on Saturday, March 11, 3-5 p.m., at 405 Dolores Street, No. 3, in San Francisco. ▼

Michael Langley

Michael Lynn Langley, 33, a former Falls Church, Virginia resident, died Saturday, October 15, 1994, of AIDS related complications at the Carolinas Medical Center in Charlotte, N.C., according to his companion of ten years, Bill Wagner of Falls Church.

Langley was born July 2, 1961 in Roane County, Tenn. While in high school, Langley worked at a fast food store as a manager, at a tree nursery, at a horticulture store, and in hotel maintenance. After graduating from high school in 1985 in Charlotte, N.C., Langley moved to Falls Church. He worked as an office manager at Herman's Sporting Goods Store in Tyson's Corner, Va. In 1993, Langley also worked at Steuart-Agip station, a petroleum company, in Falls Church.

As a member of Grace Baptist Church in Alexandria, Va., Langley was a youth minister, choir member, and usher. He became a member of Columbia Baptist Church in Falls Church after Grace Baptist disbanded in 1989.

In 1991, Langley encouraged Wagner to create Telos Ministries, Inc., a non-profit Baptist organization based in Falls Church for people with AIDS and their families and friends, said Wagner. As an officer of Telos, Langley was responsible for the prison ministry which served inmates "who felt alienated from their friends, families, and churches."

Langley's other interests included spending time with his cat, Thumper, camping, and gardening. He also enjoyed traveling to Canada and Puerto Rico.

Langley moved back to Charlotte in February to be closer to his family, Wagner said.

In addition to Wagner, Langley is survived by his former wife, Debbie Hawkins; and parents, Harold and Alama Griffith Langley of Byrdstown, Tenn. Langley is also survived by sisters, Debbie Langley of Charlotte; Barbara Fralick of Byrdstown; Sandra Wingham of Hartsville, Tenn.; and Brenda Milligan of Taylorsville, N.C.; and brothers, Steve of Winston-Salem, N.C.; David of Charlotte; Donny of Concord; N.C. Danny of Pineville, N.C.; Ricky of Lansing, Tenn.; and Chris Langley of Byrdstown; and many other relatives and friends.

Langley's remains were cremated Oct. 17. A memorial service will be held Oct. 22 in Byrdstown, Tenn.

Contributions in Langley's name may be made to the Metrolina AIDS Project, PO Box 32662, Charlotte, NC 28232.

Chuck Lilly

Charles Lilly III, 25, of Alexandria, Virginia, died Friday, June 10, 1994 at the Hospice of Northern Virginia in Arlington of AIDS-related complications, according to his loving friend, Mitch Metzner of Arlington.

Lilly was born July 8, 1968 in Ft. Belvoir, Va. He was raised in Northern Virginia before relocating to Evansville, Ind., with his family in 1980. He attended Central High School in Evansville before enlisting in the U.S. Army in 1985, where he became infected with HIV at the age of 17, Metzner said.

Lilly served at Ft. Gordon in Augusta, Ga., and Ft. Stewart in Hinesville, Ga. before retiring from service in 1989. He then relocated to Northern Virginia, where he continued working for the Department of Defense at the Discharge Review Board in Crystal City, Va.

Lilly is most remembered for his lifelong talent and passion for music that he shared by working as a disc jockey at local dance clubs, including the Frat House, Zone, Badlands, Metropolis, Catcomb, and 12 Inch Dance Records, according to Metzner. Lilly also engineered music for friends and area health clubs. He was an accomplished singer who performed religious spirituals and popular music.

In addition to his travels in the military, Lilly relished trips to New York, Fire Island, Hawaii, California, Arizona, and Indiana. He reportedly was a dedicated advocate for human rights on every front, including the advancement of AIDS and Gay civil rights issues.

"Those who knew Chuck remember him for his electric blue eyes and brilliant smile, voracious vitality and zest for life, his boundless relationships, as well as his health club obsession, pride as a homeowner, and the blue hot rod," Metzner said.

In addition to Metzner, Lilly is survived by his parents, Rena and Charles Edward Lilly Jr.; brother, Christopher Lilly, all of Evansville; grandmother, Sadie Burns of Alexandria, Va.; aunts, Helen Long of Alexandria and Martha Williams of Annandale, Va.; uncles, Sam Burns of Alexandria and Bob Burns of Durham, N.C.; many cousins; and countless dear friends.

A funeral was held June 15 at Fort Meyer in Arlington, followed by a gravesite service with full military honors at Arlington National Cemetery. A memorial celebration of Lilly's life is being planned as an AIDS-fundraising event for the Hospice of Northern Virginia.

Charles R. Lacey

September 4, 1994

Charles Lacey, manager of P.O. Plus and the Notary Public Bureau, known for his vivid splashes of purple and quick wit passes away on Sept. 4 after a very brief struggle with AIDS.

After living in Indiana and Texas, Charles finally settled with friends in San Francisco where he lived for the last 13 years. In his final days, he returned to Indiana to be with his family.

Although the final months of his struggle were complicated with the loss of his business partner and shop, this struggle and unhappiness moved to his soul to a better place.

His circle of friends providing support, laughter, and comfort at the end included Big Ben, Suzanne, Blake, Louie, Patricia and Amber.

Those who wish to send donations of love can do so to his favorite charity, in his name: Lambda Limited, 584 Castro St. #181, SF, CA 94114.

To Charles I say: "Enjoy the laughs, jump on all the clouds, eat everything in sight and rest assured that all your predictions came true. I'll always cherish our friendship and smiles, Luv; you have made my life unique!"

Howard L. Lippman

Howard L Lippman, 38, of Cambridge, died Nov. 14 of complications due to AIDS.

Mr. Lippman was born in the Bronx and was raised in Fair Lawn, NJ. Upon completion of high school he moved to San Francisco, where he lived for several years before moving to New York City to begin a career in retail sales and buying. While in New York he worked for Bergdorf Goodman and Bloomingdale's department stores.

Howard moved to Boston in 1984 and continued his career in retail by working for Charles Jourdan Shoes, Jordan Marsh, and Lord and Taylor. He eventually went into business with a partner by opening up his own shoe store on Newbury St., Ian Shoes.

Howard is survived by his loving parents, Arnold and Florence of West Palm Beach, FL; his dear sister, Janis of Boston; his aunt, Anne Davis, of West Palm Beach, FL; and many devoted friends from Boston and New York.

Funeral services were held on Nov. 16 at Levine Chapel in Brookline and a memorial observance at the home of Janis Lippman and Ellen Grubert. Remembrances may be made to Cambridge Cares About AIDS, Inc., 678 Mass. Ave., Cambridge, MA 02139.

LEFF - Of Brookline, December 25, 1995. Dr. Robert Leff, Spouse of the late Jeffrey D. Fronczek. Son of Phyllis (Glick) Leff of St. Petersburg Beach, FL & the late Isadore Leff. DIED: Frank Lilly, 65, geneticist, of prostate cancer October 14 in New York City. Lilly was the only openly gay member of President Reagan's 13-member AIDS commission. He headed the genetics department at Albert Einstein College of Medicine in New York City from 1976 to 1989 and was a member of the board of Gay Men's Health Crisis, an AIDS service group, from 1984 to 1986.

Terry Leftrook

March 12, 1948 - Oct. 24, 1994

Terry Leftrook passed away October 24 at Davies Medical Center after a long fight with AIDS. Before his illness, Terry became an institution in the Castro; Herb Caen described how Terry stopped traffic wherever he went in his open-top Alfa Romeo with his pet bird, Oliver, on his shoulder. Handsome and tailored to a fault, he somehow still managed to wear too much jewelry, turning heads wherever he went.

A brilliant designer, Terry produced stunning artwork, sculpture and furniture for clients around the country. A partner in Trillium Graphics, he did incredible work with internationally acclaimed artists like Wayne Thibault, producing prints for the Smithsonian, the Metropolitan Museum of Art, the Metropolitan Opera, and other museums and opera associations in the USA and Canada. His passions included classical music, cooking and entertaining, and travel to the art capitals of Europe.

This classy, sexy, spiritual guy will be missed by Al and Nancy Leftrook, Ruth Tauber, his church family and a close circle of friends. His memorial service was held last Thursday, October 27, at the Church of the Covenant. ▼

Felix Lopez

Felix Lopez, 39, a former Washington, D.C. resident, died of AIDS related complications, on Thursday, October 6, 1994, in Puerto Rico, according to his longtime friend, Tony Garcia of D.C.

Lopez was a scientist and native of Puerto Rico, born June 28, 1955. He studied biochemistry at the University of Puerto Rico where he received a bachelor's degree in 1976. He went on to earn a master's in biochemistry at the university in 1980, focusing on cellular and molecular biology.

While at the University of Puerto Rico, Lopez did independent cellular and molecular research and assisted faculty in laboratory research. He also co-published in the Journal of Comp. Biochemistry and Physiology and American Society of Cell Biology. In addition, he presented abstracts at national and international conferences and taught general biology to pre-medical school students.

Following school, Lopez moved to Scotts Valley, Calif. where he worked as a computer technician. In 1985, Lopez enlisted in the U.S. Army as a sergeant. While in the Army, he worked at the Walter Reed Army Medical Center, in D.C., as a biological science assistant, and co-authored abstracts for the American Association of Dental Research and for the American Society of Microbiology. Lopez also was a non-commissioned officer in charge of the Microbiology Branch, and was safety officer for that branch. He won numerous awards, including the Army Achievement Medal and the Army Good Conduct Medal.

After Lopez was honorably discharged in 1990, he went to work for the Henry Jackson Foundation in Rockville, Md., where he was a protein biochemistry technician. In this capacity, Lopez worked on the characterization and purification of protein antigens and antibodies applicable to the gp160 protein of HIV as part of a vaccine study. Many of the research studies Lopez worked on were presented at national and international conferences and symposiums. He retired from the Foundation in the spring, and returned to Puerto Rico in September.

Lopez's others interests included growing orchids, going to the theater and movies, reading, exercising, and enjoying the outdoors. Lopez visited Africa, the Middle East, the Caribbean, South and North America, and Europe.

"Bear's Secret"

"Am I done yet?"

"No, be still, for your secret must be sewn in, then you'll be ready". A gentle finger patted Bear's nose. The same finger quickly wiped a tear from the Sewer's face, so as not to frighten the new bear. Then, the finger carried a kiss and a prayer to Bear's forehead as the Sewer stitched in grace and strength.

"My secret? I get a secret too? I must be very special to get a secret too!" A honey colored paw reached up to the Sewer's needle.

"Oh yes little bear, you are special, and I love you very much."

"If I get a secret, do I get anything else?" Bear asked.

"Yes, I have sewn in love, kindness and remembrance."

"Remembrance? Don't I have a brain for that?" Bear was confused.

"Oh sure you do, but you will forget many things for a long time."

"I won't forget you." Two arms reached up to the Sewer. The last stitch was taken.

The Sewer lifted the little honey colored bear, embraced it and whispered, "I will be with you always, although you may forget for a while."

In Bear's excitement, he did not hear.

The honey colored bear with the secret was beautiful. The Sewer delivered the bear into the keeping of a country family where he would be loved. The little honey colored bear forgot about his secret the moment his mother held him for the first time.

Everyone loved him! They taught him how to ski on tall mountains in the winter and on clear lakes in the summer. He learned how to sow seeds in the springtime with his father. How to carve pumpkins, in the autumn that always seemed to arrive too soon.

"You see this seed son? It has a secret inside. And when it's time, that secret will start pushing from inside the shell. Pretty soon the shell will break open and let the secret out."

"The secret breaks it! It must be a bad secret. Does it hurt the little seed?" He asked as he touched the seed with a finger that carried a kiss and a prayer.

Robert LeClair

Robert LeClair, a resident of the Fenway neighborhood in Boston, died Nov. 12 at St. John of God Hospital in Brighton. He was 47.

Bob had several careers and many interests in his lifetime. He had worked at State Street Bank before his illness. In his younger days he was an accomplished pianist and dancer as well as a dance instructor. Bob was also a freelance writer. He loved searching for wild mushrooms, gemstones, bicycling, reading, traveling, and of course, Richie's Italian Slush.

Bob is survived by his parents, a brother and a sister and many friends. Funeral services were private.

"Well, I... You see the shell sort of dies...well...yes, it must hurt, maybe just a little. No, it's not a bad secret, it's a sprout. It's new and alive and it searches for the sunlight from under the soil."

"How does it know which way is up? What if it forgets?" The young one was concerned.

"It's the nature of the seed to know. If it wants to live, it must grow towards the light."

"Does it find it's way?" He asked, almost frightened.

"Oh yes! Yes it sure does and it breaks through the ground. When we see it popping up out of the dark soil, we jump up and down like this and shout with joy!" Said his father leaping into the air.

"Maybe the sun calls to it in a voice only the seed can hear." said his cousin walking up behind the two planters.

"Don't be silly, this seed doesn't even have ears!" They all laughed. The father patted soil over the seed. It was done with the same love he used when he tucked his son into bed at night.

Through the years, the honey colored bear and his cousin became good friends. They spent summers together in the woods by a lake and many snow white Christmas Eves in the city.

As teenagers they loved to draw and paint, shop and travel and even collect antiques. One time he helped his cousin choose a splendid hand painted china piggy bank that she would love forever.

Years passed and his cousin married and moved far away. She missed the honey colored bear, and sometimes felt sad because everything was changing. She grew concerned, for when they would talk, she could sense a deep pain in his voice, but he kept the reason a secret.

One holiday before their Grandmother died, the two cousins got together. They went to visit their Grandmother who was quiet and no longer knew them. That day, the honey colored bear was as quiet and distant as their Grandmother. In the silence, his cousin thought that she finally knew his secret, perhaps she had known it for years.

"Cousin, at least tell God if you can't tell me." She said, blinking back tears.

"I don't believe in God anymore...let's go." And he lifted a finger that held a kiss and placed it on his Grandmother's forehead. His cousin quickly wiped a tear from her face. As he turned to leave, she whispered that she would love him always, but in his pain he did not hear.

Three years passed, and after a long illness, the honey bear died. But he didn't die with his secret sewn in. For it slowly pushed it's way out and what he feared the most never happened. For when everyone knew the secret, they began to understand. As their understanding grew, so did their love. He was able to use his gifts of love and kindness to help others find the strength to share their secrets. He endured great pain, yet never complained.

In the end, he remembered a long ago kiss on his forehead and the Sewer that gave him grace and

A memorial service for Steven D. Lewis will be held Saturday, March 30, at 11:30 a.m. at the Smithsonian Museum's Hirshhorn Ring Auditorium, Eighth Street and Independence Avenue, SW. Lewis died of AIDS related complications on Nov. 6, 1995. His obituary was published Dec. 15.

RICHARD LEE (RICK) REHAL Two years ago today, you left us - quickly and quietly during the wee hours. We all miss you terribly but are so very thankful that it didn't drag on and on for you. Rick, you are in our thoughts often, throughout each day. I fall asleep many nights remembering happier times spent with you - bowling, skiing, eating, playing roulette with the "gang," watching your softball team, playing cards with Rod and Deb. Your dad and Shirley got to visit Hawaii late this winter - I know you always wanted to go there and am sure you were along for the trip watching out for them. Your death has left a great void in our lives and we struggle some days to make sense of it all. Take care, gentle soul, and until we meet again, please know how deeply you are loved. John, Ernie and Shirley. 3/29/97

A memorial service for Allan Dale Law will be held at 2 p.m., Saturday, February 17, at the Metropolitan Community Church of Washington, 474 Ridge St., NW. Law died three years ago, on February 17, 1993 as a result of AIDS related complications.

strength. It was that moment that he reached for the light and heard the Sewer's voice, for it was his nature to hear it. And all of heaven jumped up and down with great joy when the Sewer embraced the little honey colored bear once again.

My cousin, Scott Lilly, died of AIDS on November 28, 1993 at the age of 29. My last gift to him was a honey colored, hand stitched Teddy Bear that Scott loved. His parents have given the little bear back to me.

I miss him.

Norman Alan Licht

Norman Alan Licht, originally of Providence, RI and a resident of Boston for almost 30 years, died Jan. 12 after a brief and sudden struggle with leukemia.

While vacationing in Mexico, Norman became ill and was flown home to receive medical attention at Boston's Brigham and Women's Hospital.

Norman studied art at the Boston's Museum school, and also spent time studying abroad in Paris and traveling to Spain and Morocco. He returned to Boston to teach painting and sculpture at Vesper George School of Art. A number of his longtime friends were originally his students.

Norman, himself, was a prolific painter and sculptor. He ran The Gallery at the Arlington Street Church from its inception in 1977, where he provided shows for himself and many of his artist friends until its closing in the early 1980s.

A kind and generous friend and loving uncle who loved his friends, both human and animal, art, music and laughter. Always willing to help a friend, rescue a lost soul or set another place at the table. His death deeply saddens his friends and family and leaves an empty space that will be difficult to fill.

There will be a memorial service Jan. 21 at the Arlington Street Church. Donations may be made in memory of Alan Licht to the Animal Rescue League of Boston, P.O. Box 265, Boston, MA 02117. 95

Victor Lewis

Victor L. Lewis, formerly of Annandale, Virginia, died Sunday, September 18, 1994 at St. Francis Hospital in Poughkeepsie, New York due to AIDS-related complications, according to his longtime friend, Peter M. Zawadsky of Gaithersburg, Maryland. Lewis was 37.

Born Dec. 4, 1956 in Owensboro, Ky., Lewis graduated from Owensboro High School in 1974. He then studied tailoring at the Paducah Vocational School in Paducah, Ky., graduating in 1976.

In March 1977, Lewis enlisted in the U.S. Navy in Baltimore, Md. While in the Navy, he worked as a personnel manager. Lewis moved to the D.C. area in 1980, serving in Crystal City, Va. until he finished his tour of duty in 1985. Lewis then moved to New Paltz, N.Y. and began working in the manufacturing unit of IBM in East Fishkill, N.Y. He earned an associate of science degree in business and business administration from the Dutchess Community College in 1987.

"Victor left behind many close friends in New Paltz and Washington, D.C.," said his life partner, David Sutton of Poughkeepsie. "Among his many interests, he enjoyed gardening, running, tailoring, and camping."

In addition to Zawadsky and Sutton, Lewis is survived by his brother, Nathaniel W. Lewis of Clinton, Md.; three sisters, Alice Humphrey and Donna Talbot, both of Owensboro, Ky., and Louvenia Greenfield of Temple Hills, Md. He was predeceased by his parents, John N. Lewis and Mary Elizabeth Landers Lewis, brother, Jerry N. Lewis, and sister, Shirley A. Sanders.

A funeral was held for Lewis Sept. 20 at Beulah Baptist Church in Poughkeepsie. His remains were interred at the Elmwood Cemetery in Owensboro.

Marc Anthony Lalli died May 28 of complications from AIDS in West Hollywood. He was 37. He is survived by his companion, Gerard; his parents, Rose and Anthony; sister, Linda; and other relatives. A popular figure in West Hollywood, Lalli is also survived by many loving friends. 96

Michael Lyles

Jan. 31, 1962—March 14, 1995

On March 14, 1995, quietly and without pain, in his mother's arms, Michael left us, to suffer no more. Formerly a bartender at the Armory and at Burkhart's Pub, he served us all. Michael's never-ending energy supported our community, as he was active in some of the largest fund-raising events in recent times.

Now it is our turn to honor him. There will be a celebration of his life on Saturday, March 25, from 3 to 7 p.m. at Burkhart's. It will be a gathering to remember, to laugh, to cry, but most of all to appreciate Michael for what he did and for who he was.

We cannot change what has happened, but we all will have our memories and this one last time to party in his honor, as well as his remembrance. The Lord has taken his body, but he will always be with us in our hearts. We love you, Michael.

Mark Lanni Remembered 95

Mark's funeral was held on Saturday, January 21 in Wilmington MA. As well as attending the dinners, Mark joined us for the Last Tuesday retreat in Cohasset last April. We came to know a very spiritual being who left this world much loved. Mark, we will miss you.

Mayo Lee, founder of Gay education fund, dies at 48

by Darice Clark

Mayo Lee, founder of the Gay and Lesbian Education Fund (GLEF), died Monday, October 31, 1994, of AIDS related complications at his Washington, D.C. home, according to his companion of 15 years, Gregg Crumley of Philadelphia. Lee was 48.

The GLEF is a nonprofit organization that grew out of the Gay and Lesbian Activists Alliance (GLAA) in 1979, with the goal of sponsoring educational projects about the Gay community. The idea arose out of a lawsuit GLAA won against the Washington Metro Area Transit Authority when Metro refused to display the group's pro-Gay public service announcements.

Susan Donahue, currently head of the Board of Directors for GLEF, said Lee and other Gay activists at the time were attempting to raise money for the lawsuit, and realized there were no organizations to approach for small grants. Lee and the activists "saw a need and they filled it," said Donahue.

"He was a terrific person," said Christopher Bates who worked with Lee on GLEF. "He was passionate about the quality of life for Gay and Lesbian people in this community. He was very committed to educating people about the Gay and Lesbian lifestyle in the [D.C.] community, and he highlighted that we all come from a common culture, American culture. He was a special man and he will be missed."

Lee's work with GLEF was an extension of his activism with GLAA. He was vice president of GLAA from 1976 until 1977 and president from 1978 until 1979, said Craig Howell, a longtime friend.

Lee was very involved with several D.C. Council initiatives, said Howell. He helped draft what became D.C.'s 1977 Human Rights Law, which includes protection from discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation. Lee also guaranteed that the legislation itself would be protected by getting the Council to pass a law saying that any future referenda or ballot initiatives could not restrict the human rights law but only expand it, Howell said.

Lorri L. Jean recalls that Lee encouraged her to run for president of GLAA. She did and became the group's first female president. "For me, Mayo was a mentor," she said.

Lee held a lot of meetings and events at his home. For years, GLAA met there, said Jean. Two annual events community activists always looked forward to at Lee's home were the holiday party, said GLAA Vice President Mindy Daniels, and the "sandwich making" for D.C.'s Gay Pride Day. Each year, Lee would purchase the ingredients for the sandwiches and about a dozen activists would prepare the sandwiches to sell at GLAA's booth on Pride Day.

Daniels also remembers Lee "as a wonderful, caring, and sensitive person. When I became involved in the political community, he went out of his way to make me feel comfortable — he and his lover, Gregg. They saw that I was new and that I needed a little tending to. They went out of their way to [tend to me]."

Lee also worked to ensure that the D.C. Public Libraries would make Gay youth feel welcome. He served on the Board of Trustees for the D.C. Public Library from 1984 until 1993. For his Gay activism, GLAA awarded Lee a community service award in 1992.

Since Lee was from Arkansas, many said they will remember his Southern charm while others will recall his wit.

"On the personal level," said Crumley, "they will remember that he was always there for his friends. He was so committed to things. He followed through with everything. He was very gifted at accomplishing political goals, compromising, and finding solutions."

Born William Mayo Lee on Sept. 28, 1946 in Memphis, Tenn., Lee grew up in Clarendon, Ark. He received a bachelor's degree from Washington and Lee in Lexington, Va. in 1968. He earned a law degree from the University of Virginia School of Law in Charlottesville in 1971.

After law school, Lee enlisted in the U.S. Army where he served within the Army's Military Intelligence Branch. Lee left the military in 1973 when he went to work for the Cost of Living Council within the Internal Revenue Service. During the mid-1970s, Lee worked for the Federal Energy Administration. He then worked as an attorney for the Energy Department's Office of General Counsel from the late 1970s until his death.

In addition to Crumley, Donahue, Bates, Howell, Jean, and Daniels, he is survived by his mother, Margaret Lee of Clarendon, Ark.; sister, Ann Lee Mills of Clinton, Mo.; and brothers, Davidson and J. Perry, both of Clarendon, Ark.

Lee's remains were cremated. A memorial service will be held Sunday, Nov. 6, at 3 p.m., at his home. Call (202) 234-5358 for more information.

Contributions in Lee's name may be made to Food and Friends, PO Box 70601, Washington, DC 20024 or to the D.C. Public Library Foundation, 901 G St., NW, Washington, DC 20001. ▼

Passing friends Roger B. Laton

Mr. Roger B. Laton, 27, passed away on Sunday, Nov. 6, peacefully at home, with his companion of over five years by his side. 94

Mr. Laton was born in Pearl Harbor, Hawaii in May, 1967. Moving with his mother and sister to Mamaroneck, New York, he graduated from Mamaroneck High School in 1985. He came to Boston in the fall of 1985 to attend Boston University.

In the fall of 1987, while pursuing his studies, he joined the Boston University Pappas Law Library as a student employee. In March, 1989, he obtained a full time position as the faculty liaison to the library, a position he held until May, 1992 when he was promoted to the position of Reference Assistant/Interlibrary Loan Supervisor, a position he held until his passing.

During his tenure at the Law Library, Mr. Laton continued his studies at Boston University and graduated with a Bachelor's of Science Degree in Biology in May, 1994. He enjoyed his work so much, he applied for and was accepted at Simmons College in the Master's of Library Science program for the fall of 1994, but he found it necessary, due to health, to postpone the start of his graduate work.

He will forever be missed by his companion Marc W. Belisle of Roslindale, step-daughters Susan Williams and Conchita Belisle and step-granddaughter Cassandra Williams, all of Eastham, as well as his father Peter of California, mother Barbara Stewart and sister Lori Longpre, both of New York.

Roger was an active member of Riders, MC Boston, serving as quartermaster until his passing. Donations may be made in his name to Riders MC AIDS Charity Fund, PO Box 519, Boston, MA 02258.

A celebration of Roger's life will be held on January 16, 1995, Roger and Marc's 6th anniversary, at 7:30 p.m., at the Jesuit Urban Center, 775 Harrison Avenue, Boston, MA.

William J. LaFarge, 47

Medical social worker
2-25-95

William J. LaFarge of Arlington died of heart failure Saturday in New England Deaconess Hospital in Boston, where he was employed as a social worker. He was 47.

Born in Somerville, Mr. LaFarge graduated from Brighton High School, the University of Massachusetts at Boston and Simmons College School of Social Work.

An Army veteran, he was a medical social worker at Deaconess since 1989 and previously had been a psychiatric social worker at the Fenway Community Health Center and the D Street Clinic, both in Boston.

He leaves his mother, Margery (MacKenzie) LaFarge of Arlington; four brothers, John of Roslindale, Leo and Robert, both of Malden, and Richard of San Francisco; and five sisters, Margaret Devlin of Somerville, Grace Pappas of Hyde Park, Madeline Kuczynski of Woburn, Marion Bagley of Medford and Esther Casey of Natick.

A funeral service will be held at 11 a.m. tomorrow in the Celestial Chapel in J.S. Waterman & Sons-Eastman-Waring Funeral Home in Boston. Burial is in New Calvary Cemetery in Roslindale.

Denys Lemay

May 24, 1954 - Feb. 20, 1995

Shortly before his 41st birthday, Denys left us at 2:47 a.m. Monday, February 20, after a very short illness with AIDS complications. He was born in Manseau, Qc., Canada, and had lived in San Francisco since February 20, 1980. Denys had a great sense of timing and humor, even to the end: he left us on the 15th anniversary of his arrival in this wonderful city. He was an elegant, responsive, dedicated and quiet man, who worked as a dining room instructor and maitre d' at the California Culinary Academy for 13 years, where he touched many lives and was loved by everyone who met him.

A memorial service will be held at the CCA, 625 Polk St., on Saturday, March 25, 3-5 p.m. Denys' family will hold a memorial service for him in Manseau on Saturday, May 20.

Denys is survived by his father, Jean-Marie; sisters, Therese, Lise and Nicole; brothers, Henri, Claude and Real; many relatives in Canada; and many friends in San Francisco (the city he loved best), across the U.S.A., Canada and France. He is now reunited with his mother, Ghislaine; his brother, Andre; and many dear friends. ▼

Kevin Patrick Lally

May 10, 1955 - Feb. 27, 1995

Kevin passed away on Feb. 27 after a courageous seven-year battle with AIDS, surrounded by his longtime companion and family. During his time he taught us how to live life to the fullest and, in dying, how to leave this life with courage and dignity.

Kevin was born in Lowell, Mass. He graduated Phi

Beta Kappa and magna cum laude from Holy Cross College, Worcester, Mass. His academic achievement continued when he graduated with honors from the Thunderbird School of International Management in Phoenix, Ariz. He was vice president of Devine and Partners Advertising in San Francisco.

Kevin was predeceased by his father, Albert Lally of Lowell, Mass. He is survived by his mother, Margaret Lally of Lowell; brothers, Michael of Lowell and Brian of Smithfield, Va.; sister-in-law, Judith of Smithfield; nieces; Erin Lally and Kristian Horne; and nephews, Sean Lally and Timothy Wenk. Most importantly, he is survived by his lifelong partner, Sheldon Cox.

Kevin was a wonderful son, brother and friend whose life and love touched so many people and whose memory we will celebrate forever.

Donations should be made to Project Open Hand or Visiting Nurses and Hospice.

I'll miss you, baby. Love, Shel ▼

Kenneth P. Lowe

Nov. 29, 1946 - April 23, 1995

Ken, the all-time perfectionist and purist in food, music, computers, friends and lifestyle, has left for an extraordinary new journey.

Ken passed away at Kaiser SF after a bout of AIDS-related pneumonia. In spite of near blindness this past year, Ken maintained his independence to the end.

Ken leaves behind many dear friends and family, and his beloved kitty, Pidora.

Coming from Oregon 25 years ago, Ken started his career at Simon Brothers' Gourmet Foods and Wine. He continued this when Jurgensen's from Pasadena acquired Simon Brothers. He started some computer courses at this time, then off to LA, more Jurgensen's and then computers at Cannon Films and Orion before returning to SF five years ago and working at Crescent Jewelers' computer department, where he leaves many wonderful friends.

Ken was founder, organizer and sysop of 5 Star Bulletin Board. Thank you, Bob! Ken is spending eternity with his mom, who died when he was seven, in SE Oregon.

Thanks go out for all the wonderful care and concern of those who helped him at Kaiser.

Kenny will be missed by all his friends. ▼

Priest's death touches church parishioners 95

SHREWSBURY, N.J. — Most of the parishioners of Christ Episcopal Church knew their priest, Rev. James LaSage, and his male lover lived together in the rectory. Those who did not already know learned on Feb. 5, when Episcopal Bishop Joe Doss told the congregation. Doss also told the congregation that LaSage was dying of AIDS-related complications.

According to the Asbury Park Sunday Press, LaSage died Feb. 16, leaving behind his companion, the Rev. James C. McReynolds, two Labrador retrievers, and a mourning congregation.

"Nobody abandoned him," longtime church member Mike Badal told the Asbury Park newspaper. A steady flow of parishioners visited LaSage at the rectory. McReynolds, also an Episcopal priest, constantly sat by his side.

Some parishioners, however, said they wished they had been informed of LaSage's illness earlier.

"As close as he was to all of us, he could have been honest with us, so as he was going through all this, we could have reached out to pray for him," said Charles Monet.

According to McReynolds, he and LaSage decided to neither hide nor disclose their relationship when they first moved from New York City to Shrewsbury in 1988.

"We believed it would distract from what Jim wanted to do as a priest," he said. "If we had made it an issue then, it would have had a divisive impact on his purpose for coming here, which was to teach the love of God to the people."

Larry Lance

Jan. 24, 1959 - June 5, 1995

Our friend, Larry, left this world on June 5 after a valiant 2 1/2-year battle with AIDS. He very often amazed his doctors with his ability to keep fighting in order to be there for the next promising drug or regimen. Larry passed away peacefully at home, surrounded by friends and his beloved cats, Opus and Pirate.

Larry came to the Bay Area in the early '80s from Illinois. He worked in management positions at a variety of retail stores until settling into the legal services profession. Larry's real love, however, was collecting. He enjoyed scouring the flea markets and swap meets to find hidden treasure.

Larry is survived by his parents, Joe and Marianne, and his brothers and sister, as well as many friends and acquaintances. Many thanks to Jan, Larry's helper, who worked so hard to maintain the quality of his life, and to his nurse, Jerry, who paid such close attention to his medical needs.

A celebration of Larry's life is currently being planned for July or August. Please contact Paul Gengler at (415) 255-6860 for further information. Anyone interested in adopting Larry's wonderful cats can contact Pets Unlimited at (415) 563-6700. ▼

LeBlanc Memorial

A memorial service for Robert Steven LeBlanc, who died Saturday, October 7, 1995 of AIDS related complications, will be held Sunday, December 3, at 10 a.m. at the Church Street Theatre, 1742 Church St., NW, Washington, D.C. His obituary ran in the October 27 issue of the Blade.

Dennis Jose Llanora

Feb. 18, 1962 - April 17, 1995

Dennis peacefully moved on to another plane of existence after a long, valiant fight against AIDS, leaving his family, friends and the love of his life, Magne. Though often in pain this past year, he never lost his sense of humor nor his deep religious beliefs, constantly demonstrating an appreciation and thoughtfulness for those who cared for him.

Born and educated in the Philippines, Dennis came to the States when he was 18 years old, seeking a life as an openly gay young man. He initially lived and studied in Missouri and Los Angeles, but soon discovered San Francisco, moving here on his 20th birthday. He studied at Golden Gate University, worked in the City, and loved to travel, easily making friends wherever he went.

A natural athlete, he was an excellent tennis player who never seemed to a tennis match on television and spoke of his pilgrimage to Melekeok as the high point of his life. Proud of being a naturalized American citizen who brought his entire family to the States, he took an interest in politics and public affairs, yet never lost his boyish fascination with beauty and his passion for good-looking.

Scott Parker Lucas

March 23, 1950 - April 16, 1995

At 11 p.m. Easter Sunday, Scott died peacefully at home after a brave battle against AIDS. With him were his life partner, Dr. Richard Wolitz, and his dearest friend, Lisa Leff.

Scott is survived by his loving parents, Dorothy and John Lucas; devoted sister and brother-in-law, Donna and Dickie Stanley; and his beloved niece and nephew, Julie and John Stanley, of La Marque, Texas.

Scott graduated from La Marque High School and the University of Texas in Austin. He was employed by Pacific Bell for more than 20 years and leaves behind many wonderful friends at the Company.

Scott's friends and family gathered for a memorial service at Church of the Advent on April 19. His ashes were laid to rest in Palm Springs, California, on April 29.

Special thanks go to Sandra Orr, our angel, and to the dedicated staff at Kaiser San Francisco Hospital and Home Hospice Program; you helped make Scott's journey the peaceful one he deserved. ▼

Father of gay son leaves $450,000 to gay organization

SEATTLE (AP) — A former Boeing executive has left $450,000 to the Pride Foundation, the largest gift ever bequeathed to a gay and lesbian community foundation, foundation officials believe.

William S. Lambert died March 30, and left $450,000 to the group in honor of his son Gray Lambert, who died of AIDS in 1991 at age 33.

"To me, the simple message of this bequest is the importance of family, and of honoring the ongoing commitments of those we love," said Ted Lord, Pride Foundation executive director.

Lambert asked the foundation to give priority to supporting Lambert House, a Capitol Hill center for gay and lesbian youth named for his son.

Gray Lambert was a former president of the Association of Gay and Lesbian Youth Advocates and was a volunteer for the Seattle Counseling Services for Sexual Minorities.

"Bill was very supportive of his son Gray and was very interested in perpetuating Gray's memory and the work that was of interest to Gray," said Doug Lawrence, executor of Lambert's will. "That's why he left this bequest to Pride, in further support of what Gray would have wanted to do."

Arlis Stewart, who helped found Lambert House, said William Lambert often attended open houses at the center after his son died.

"This is the magnificent thing that Bill has done," she said. "It suggests that for a lot of young gay and lesbian people and adults, there's increasing family support." ▼

Doug Luiz

Dec. 17, 1959 - June 10, 1995

Our beloved friend died peacefully June 10 at 7:10 a.m. in his parents' home, just as he wished. Doug was best known in San Francisco as the infamously handsome Lone Star bartender and first Powerplay magazine coverman.

All friends and family are invited to Donny's garden, 2253 Fulton, on Saturday, June 24, 1-6 p.m., for a memorial gathering. Commemorative donations may be made to the AIDS Emergency Fund. ▼

Arthur G. Lopes, 37; a crusader for gay rights, dancer, gardener ²⁵

A memorial service is planned later this month in Portland, Maine, for Arthur George Lopes, a crusader for gay rights who once lost his job when he brought his lover to a company Christmas party.

Mr. Lopes died May 4 in Albuquerque, N.M., of a brain tumor. He was 37.

He had lived with AIDS for many years.

He was born in Furstenfeldbruck, Germany, the son of an Air Force officer, and grew up in various countries as his father's duty stations changed.

He graduated from Fryeburg Academy in Fryeburg, Maine, where he was class president and starred in track and field. He majored in plant and soil science at the University of Maine in Orono where he graduated in 1981.

He worked in Portland for years before moving to Albuquerque after losing his job for bringing his friend to the party. The story of the subsequent uproar was published in the Maine Times.

While still in New England, Mr. Lopes marched in several Gay Pride marches in Boston.

He was an amateur dancer who performed in various shows and was named Mr. Drummer Boy of New England in 1983. He also laid out and planted various gardens throughout New England.

Mr. Lopes leaves his father, George A. Lopes of Windham, Maine; his mother, Lorette Marchand of Albuquerque; two sisters, Lora Lopes of Cambridge and Nadine Lopes Marchand of Mount Vernon, Maine; a brother, Larry of Portland; his partner, Adolfo Argueta, and his friend and caretaker, Michael Shearer, both of Albuquerque.

Mr. Lopes' ashes have been buried in his garden in Albuquerque.

The memorial service will be held at 3 p.m. June 24 in the First Parish Unitarian Church, Portland.

Winston H. Leu

July 27, 1955 - May 21, 1995

With tremendous courage, strength and dignity, Winston has joined the thousands of angels who have battled AIDS.

Winston took time to always be funny, kind and generous to friends and loved ones.

Who can forget his infamous "Hang-On to Your Hangover!" parties every New Year's Day, his gesturing and singing with Chinese opera music or disco, his Erte collection, the loud mahjong games or showing off his dark tans from vacations in Hawaii. People smiled and laughed with Winston around because of his infectious wit, sense of humor, style and zest for life.

A North Beach-raised native San Franciscan, Winston graduated from Galileo High and San Francisco State University with a bachelor's in business. With remarkable analytical, accounting and people skills, he developed an industrious career in supermarket management.

Like a rare piece of jade, Winston Leu was a very precious gift. Thanks, Anna Mae, for the special warmth you brought into our minds and hearts. Winston will be greatly missed by his parents, siblings, nieces, nephews, friends and faithful shar-pei dogs Tai and Chi - and especially by Steven Baker, his companion for life. ▼

Charles Alan Lings

Feb. 17, 1944 - Sept. 17, 1995

Chuck departed peacefully from this life on Sunday morning, September 17, after a valiant four-year struggle with the AIDS virus. A native Californian, he moved to San Francisco in 1982 from Southern California in connection with his employment as an insurance claims adjuster.

Chuck was a loving man with a great sense of humor and an avid boatsman. He enjoyed being with his beloved dog Lady, libations with friends and occasional visits to the theatre.

Chuck's ashes will be spread at sea off Catalina Island, where he lovingly bid farewell to his father and mother. Besides his dog he is survived by a sister, two nieces and many friends.

Our love and peace are with you, dear friend. ▼

Greer Lankton, 38, a sculptor who went through a sex-change operation in 1979, was found dead in her Chicago apartment Nov. 18. The cause of death has not been determined. Lankton, a subject of photographer Nan Goldin, was part of the East Village art scene in New York during the 1980s, and returned to Chicago in 1987. THE NEW YORK TIMES Dec. 22 had a lengthy essay by Goldin on Lankton. Goldin said that Lankton reportedly told her that years after her sex change (at 21), ³⁶ "she often regretted the sex change, feeling that she had been rushed into it at too early an age and wished she had had the courage and support to live her life as a drag queen."

Frederick Paul Levy

Dec. 27, 1955 - May 27, 1995

Our dear friend Fred left us after a very long and painful struggle with AIDS.

Fred had a lifelong passion for music and was a popular radio personality on several stations, including KZOZ and KSLY, both broadcasting from San Luis Obispo, California. He also helped design the stereo system, supplied the records, and eventually deejayed at the first gay bar (The Journey's Inn) in San Luis Obispo.

When Fred moved to the Bay Area, he first deejayed at The Answer in Redwood City. Later he deejayed at the 'N' Touch and the End Up. Fred will best be remembered at The Badlands and The Phoenix, where he worked for eight years. Fred's personal collection of oldies records was a great success at The Badlands.

Fred will be missed by many, including his beloved cat Gus. For information regarding a pending memorial, please contact J.R. Bell at 648-0348.

Russell LeClair

July 8, 1927 - May 15, 1995

Russ was born in Massachusetts 67 years ago. He and his companion, Billy Hanson, were residents of San Francisco for over 45 years. He was in the Navy during W.W.II and had a barbershop on Hyde Street for many years.

Russ and Billy were great cat lovers and always had at least two (usually Siamese) running around their apartment on Washington Street. They spent many happy vacations together in Mexico.

Russ died of lung cancer and was cremated; his ashes were scattered over the ocean. Russ is survived by his sister, Jackie Quattrin; his brother, Roger LeClair; and many friends. ▼

Ion "Bud" Lachman

Bud passed away peacefully at Coming Home Hospice at 4:30 a.m., Jan. 8, from AIDS. There were two friends at his bedside.

Those who knew Bud knew about his concise criticisms of this society and his three areas of passion and accomplishment: classical music (especially of the 19th century), literature and poetry, and ancient Egypt. A rare individual, preferring anonymity, monastic in temperament and kind, his greatest ongoing consolation in life was his own comfort with eternity.

Bud moved here from San Diego about 30 years ago and is survived by a brother. There were no memorial services; his ashes have been scattered at sea. ▼

Richard T. Long

Dec. 5, 1946 - June 20, 1995

Dr. Richard T. Long died at his home in Oakland on June 20, according to his life partner, Alan Bremer, R.N. Dr. Long was born in San Francisco and grew up in the East Bay, attending Bishop O'Dowd High School in Oakland and St. John's Seminary College in Camarillo, California. He earned a Ph.D. in psychology from Washington State University in Pullman, Washington.

Dr. Long completed his psychology internship at the Palo Alto Veterans Administration Hospital in 1974. From 1974 to 1977, he served as a co-director of clinical training in the Human Sexuality Department at the School of Medicine of the University of California at San Francisco. He was in the private practice of psychology in San Francisco from 1978 until illness forced him to retire in June 1990.

Richard was president of the San Francisco Psychological Association (1981) and a proud member of the Delta Airlines Royal Medallion frequent flyers association. He pursued his lifelong interest in travel, food, wine, theatre, opera and sharing his talent for finding joy in life with friends and colleagues.

Services and interment were private. He is keenly missed by his family and his large chosen family of friends.

MY MESSAGE

I died three years ago at the age of 41. My friends helped me write this - with me in death as they were in life.

I had AIDS. Unlike some who have gone before, my death was not quick, nor was it painless. I hope, oh how I hope, that a cure can be found so others won't suffer.

My friends respected all of my wishes. One was that I didn't want an obituary, but a celebration of my life. Hopefully this message will help deal with the other, more important, questions. Questions about life and death, family and friends, love and support, and fears and forgiveness.

The silver lining for me was a chance to close so many circles as my life ebbed away. Three days before I died, my mother came to see me. We had been estranged for over twenty years. How peaceful it was to be able to forgive her, totally and unconditionally. Whether she had forgiven me, I will never know. Nobody should ever be rejected, forgotten, or disowned because of who they are, of their sexual orientation, or of what illness they may have.

I had a birthday several months before my death. I knew it would be my last. The actuarial tables said I had led half a life, not a whole one, but this plague would not be denied. Yet, I knew that my life had been whole, surrounded as I was by

ROBERT GEORGE LOCKE

February 9, 1951 - July 13, 1992

Bill Koch, my partner of 22 years, and his loving family who accepted me as a son, brother, and/or uncle; my sister and her children; and close and caring friends like Mike Campbell, Mike Cucciardo, Bob Fox, Bob Gay, and Jim Rainey to name a few.

I leave all of them behind, knowing that even in their grief, they carried out my last wish - that they should celebrate life, and live it happily and fully, however long or short it may be.

"Love each other forever.....walk the paths freely, openly, and happily together."

Gregory Nicholas Lawrance

April 8, 1948 - Aug. 11, 1995

Gregory passed away at 11:15 p.m. at Davies Medical Center in the presence of his loving partner. His death resulted from a brief struggle with AIDS-related lymphoma.

Born, raised and educated in England, Gregory studied history and law, eventually becoming a barrister. In 1980 he and his then partner, Alan Hord, moved to San Francisco, where they became involved in the Trocadero scene. Gregory returned to law and began practicing as a self-employed attorney.

Gregory had a wide variety of cultural interests, but he especially enjoyed classical music, opera and the ballet. He portrayed a vast range of characters as a supernumerary with the San Francisco Opera. He was also formerly a member of the Gay Men's Chorus.

In addition to keeping his body in great shape, Gregory was an avid reader, gardener and world traveler. He had a passion for architecture and a talent for learning languages. Many will remember him as a perfect English gentleman: handsome, charming and down-to-earth, with an elegant accent, beautiful eyes, and a warm and winning sense of humor.

He is survived by his mother, sister and other relatives, all in England; his many friends; his beloved kitties, Tigger and Piglet; and his partner, Eric Schwier. ▼

Paul D. Lowery

1937 - 1995

Paul chose a different path a couple of weeks ago. Born in South Carolina, he was raised in Baltimore, Maryland. After graduating from Johns Hopkins University, he moved to the Bay Area.

Paul's first teaching position was at the Carey School in San Mateo; later he joined the Millbrae school system. He was a popular teacher at both schools.

Paul spent most of his time, after an early retirement, restoring and renovating several Victorians in San Francisco. He was hard to get to know and difficult to get along with, but after a friendship formed, he was a loyal and long-term friend. Passionate and compassionate come to mind readily when you think of Paul.

Support of the James Hormel Gay and Lesbian Center (c/o SF Main Public Library) was one of Paul's favorite visions. Private services are pending. ▼

David Lemos

Oct. 14, 1956 - Aug. 17, 1995

David Lemos, 38, died of AIDS complications in Los Angeles on Thursday, August 17, surrounded by loving family and friends. He is survived by his father and mother, John and Antoinette Lemos; two sisters, Loretta Garrido and Rebecca Friend; and six brothers, Michael, Andrew, Thomas, Aaron, Lawrence and twin, Daniel.

A native of Los Angeles, Lemos was director of Development for Greenpeace USA, a position he had held from 1993. In 1992-93 David served on staff as an instructor with the Caregivers Project, based in San Francisco. From 1990 to 1992, he served as executive director of the NAMES Project Foundation, where he had been since 1988 as chapter development coordinator, then managing director.

A seasoned stage director with a B.A. from Santa Clara University, Lemos was an accomplished choreographer and member of the Society of Stage Directors and Choreographers. He co-founded the San Jose Repertory Company in 1980, and served as its producing and artistic director for seven years. He also wrote and directed Remember My Name, a play about the NAMES Project Memorial Quilt.

David requested that donations be made to: The Caregivers Project, 4 Embarcadero Center, Suite 5163, San Francisco, CA

Sergio Miranda Lopez died Dec. 28, of complications from AIDS in Venice Beach, Calif. He was 35. A native of Michoacan, Mexico, he settled in Los Angeles in 1987 becoming a hairdresser. He was diagnosed with AIDS shortly after becoming a permanent resident of the United States in 1995. He is survived by his companion of six years, attorney Thomas J. Coleman Jr.; his mother, Ofelia; brothers Samuel, Jose Luis, Simon Pedro, Manuel and Jesus; and sisters Lucila, Irma Ascencio and Maria Luisa Ascencio. 95

Robert Larson, 39, of Palos Heights, died peacefully at home Aug. 16 after a nearly 10-year struggle with AIDS. A native of Minnesota, he moved to Palos Heights as a young age and as a teenager became involved in equestrian sports, frequently riding and showing his horse, Hombre, and winning numerous prizes. At age 19 he met his life partner, Angelo Cottonaro, and moved to Chicago. He worked as a hairdresser in Chicago and the suburbs and also spent several winters working at a resort in Key West. In 1990, a year after Angelo's death, he moved to South Beach, Fla., where he worked at several part-time jobs. He also was active in a number of organizations, including ACT UP and Body Positive, spoke to many groups about living with HIV and AIDS, and used the knowledge he had gained in dealing with the virus and the medical establishment to help many individuals. A year ago, with his health problems becoming more severe, he returned to Palos Heights, where he was cared for by his loving and supportive family and spent much time pursuing his love of reading and watching movies. He is survived by his mother, Joanne Larson; his grandmother, Mary LePore; a sister, Debbie Cottonaro; three brothers, LeRoy, Michael and Chas; many aunts, uncles, nieces, nephews, and cousins; and numerous friends in both Chicago and South Beach, including Bob, George and Tom. He was preceded in death by his life partner Angelo. Many thanks are extended to Dr. David Moore and Dr. David Blatt for the compassionate care given to both Robert and Angelo. A funeral service was held Aug. 19 at Incarnation Church in Palos Heights, and Robert was buried next to Angelo at Queen of Heaven Cemetery in Hillside. Robert faced his lengthy battle with courage and dignity, never wanting to be treated differently because of his illness. His unique personality, sense of humor and thoughtfulness will be missed by all. Donations: Open Hand.

DR. STEVEN LASIK, 32, of Chicago, died March 16. He was an emergency room doctor at Ravenswood and Holy Family hospitals. He was a member of the Gay and Lesbian Physicians, past member of the Heart Association and a member of the American Osteopathic Association, American Medical Association, American College of Osteopathic Emergency Physicians, and the American College of General Practitioners Osteopathic Medicine. Surviving are his parents, grandmother, and two brothers.

Mitchell George Leon

On Sept. 12, Mitchell George Leon (aka "China") died. He has graced our lives, and has gone, hopefully, to a better world which he knew existed.

Raised in West Roxbury, his music interest grew at the creation of Allyn Music. Many a gold album was presented to him for production, including "Borderline" by Madonna, which he helped produce. His musical ability goes back to early Boston disco, and he gave production help to both Grace Jones and Donna Summer.

He attended Emerson College and always supported the arts and helped many people within that field. His support of the community extended to AIDS Action, the Fenway Community Health Center, and Boston Street Youth Outreach. This support will be greatly missed by all who valued these causes.

His most recent venture was the creation of the Safari Club, a safe place for gay men to meet and share their lives. The staff, as well as the customers who knew Mitchell, feel his loss greatly.

Donations, per family request, can be made in his name to the American Heart Association. A celebration of his life will be held at a later date, with details to be announced.

Brian LeFevre

October 29, 1995

With his sister and friends at hand, Brian passed away at home in SF on Oct. 29 at the age of 44. A Zen Buddhist since his early twenties, Brian lived several years at the Zen monastery at Tassajara and later practiced at the SF Zen Center. He also loved Barcelona, Spain, where he lived and worked. More recently, Brian taught ESL at the Jewish Community Center in SF.

Brian's sister, Kathy, and his close friend, Barbara Kastner, took wonderful care of Brian and made the last months of his life especially filled with love. Brian always took delight in the sight of a beautiful man, and he loved the gay community. He touched our hearts with his remarkable warmth, intellect and character. We will miss his wit and sense of humor. We wish him an auspicious transition filled with the blessings and guidance of the Buddhas and bodhisattvas.

A memorial service will be held at the SF Zen Center, 300 Page Street, on Friday, Nov. 10, at 7:30 p.m. Friends are invited to attend. Offerings may be made to the SF Zen Center. ▼

Randy LaFoon

Oct. 2, 1952 - July 30, 1995

Ted (Thomas E.) Dobbie

Aug. 24, 1956 - Nov. 6, 1994

Randy and Ted, partners for 18 years, have passed away.

Most readers remember them because of their employment at American Hawaii Cruise Lines, the Russian River, their poker and holiday parties, and for the fun they had in SF gathering places like The Transfer and Ginger's Trois. They rarely missed a 49ers game. Randy and Ted had many friends - and deserved them. Each was special.

Randy passed away from cancer due to AIDS, as did Ted, nine months earlier. Special thanks are given to Visiting Nurses/Hospice for the care, attention and emotional support they showed to family members Dee, sisters Vikki, Ziggy, and Tami, who gave hands-on support to Randy in his last days and conveyed such love. Thanks also to housemates Richard, Stuart and Michael.

Their ashes are no doubt partying in the Hawaiian islands, a vacation retreat they visited often. Lift a glass for Randy and Ted, and make a contribution to VNH. They're good guys and we're gonna miss 'em. ▼

Jerry Law

February 10, 1996

On February 10, Jerry Law peacefully left this world and his most beloved city of San Francisco. No words can express the joy and love he brought to anyone who knew him. His intelligence, his wit and his warmth will be sorely missed. Jerry touched the lives of so many people. He will be especially missed by lifelong friends, Jerry and Don.

I have had the pleasure of knowing this man for almost 14 years. All who loved you hope that you are now finally at peace. I used to call him "Grandpa" - always willing to listen or to give you a hug. He was a master at making you feel special.

We're so glad you were one of "Dorothy's Friends." No donations are necessary, and no memorial service was held. If you knew Jerry: Go out and buy a Sunday paper, have a cigarette, and watch reruns of his favorite show, Murder, She Wrote. I will always miss you Jerry. Love, Charles Greg Loos died Nov. 21 after a long battle with AIDS. While he had HIV for years, it wasn't until the beginning of this year that he was diagnosed with progressive multifocal encephalopathy.

Loos touched many people in his life. He was knowledgeable about a wide variety of subjects and read constantly. His musical tastes were widely varied as well, from opera to '60s rock, to folk, jazz, country and more. He had a passion for art and archeology. Loos loved to teach others.

Loos received a master's degree in social work in May 1994. He was a social worker at Philadelphia FIGHT. He was the first paid employee at FIGHT several years earlier. He had also worked at Graduate Hospital for several years, and at St. Christopher's Hospital.

In his last few months, he was surrounded by his lover, Alan Kraus, friends Bruce, Harry, Jack, Jane, Carol and Rachael, and family members, including aunts Alice and Bobbie, and his grandmother, and his brother Scott.

Memorial contributions may be sent to Philadelphia FIGHT, 201 N. Broad St., Philadelphia, Pa. 19107 or to MANNA, 18 S. 20th St., Philadelphia, Pa. 19103. Funeral services were held Nov. 25 in Pittsburgh. A memorial service will be held at 5 p.m. Dec. 5 at St. Luke and the Epiphany Church, 330 S. 13th St. ▼

Jeffrey M. Lowell

1942 - 1995

Jeffrey M. Lowell died at his Oakland home on December 10. At his side were loving friends Karen Morebeck, Dale Lott, Robert McK-echnie, Peggy Martin Portillo and Jim Stillman.

Jeff led a life of achievement and grace.

He made substantial professional contributions during his 22-year career at the California Medical Association. He loved the opera and held season tickets for years. He died on the day the San Francisco Opera House closed for repairs.

During his final months, Jeff expressed deep gratitude for his friends in Alcoholics Anonymous, especially mentioning the Tuesday Night Men's Meeting in Oakland. In November Jeff picked up a chip honoring his 15 years of sobriety.

Jeff completed a bachelor's in comparative literature at the University of California at Berkeley in 1965, and a master's in English at San Francisco State University in 1972. He served as a Peace Corps volunteer for two years, working as a high school English teacher in Malawi, Africa.

Jeff was preceded in death by his older brother, Steve. Jeff and Steve both died of AIDS. A memorial service for Jeff was held at his home on December 16. ▼

William David Lee

William David "Bill" Lee died at his Provincetown home on Nov. 22. He was 44. 95

He was the son of Grace Lee on New Haven, CT and the late Walter A. Lee. Bill was born in New Haven on March 6, 1951. He graduated from Notre Dame High School in 1969 and from Quinnipac College in 1975.

Mr. Lee had been a resident of Provincetown since 1978. Part owner and manager of the Sea Drift Inn, he was the partner of Paul A. Christo who died in 1989. Mr. Lee served on the town's finance committee from 1993-95 and until illness forced his retirement earlier this year, he served as a volunteer and board member of the Provincetown AIDS Support Group.

Bill was a bartender at the Gifford

House from 1980 to 1991 and at the Atlantic House from 1992 to 1994. He and his partner, Dick Patulak of Provincetown who survives him, were the first male domestic partnership registered in Provincetown on July 30, 1993. Other survivors include his mother, Grace Lee of New Haven; a sister, Barbara Lee Coppola of Guilford, CT; a brother, Walter A. Lee, Jr. of Coral Springs, FL; one niece and four nephews. Bill also leaves his beloved old yellow Labrador Retriever, Noel.

A funeral service will be held Dec. 9 in the Church of St. Mary of the Harbor, Provincetown at 11 a.m. Memorial donations may be made to the Provincetown AIDS Support Group, Box 1522, Provincetown, MA 02657 or to Foley House at the same address.

LAKE—Of Boston, on August 23, 1996, David S. Lake Jr., age 39. Son of Carol Marr of Reading and the late David S. Lake Sr. Brother of Diane Haberland of Culpeper, VA. Brother-in-law of Ted Haberland of Culpeper, VA. Uncle of Beth, Theo and Elsa Haberland all of Culpeper, VA. Also survived by many friends including Don and Kim Spooner. A Memorial Mass will be held on Tuesday, August 27 at 4 P.M. at Our Lady of Victories Church, 27 Isabella St., Boston, MA. Waterman & Sons - Eastman - Waring Funeral Service of BOSTON.

Noel Langley

Noel Langley, 41, longtime Atlantic City resident, died March 15, 1996, of complications of cancer and pneumonia.

Born in New York City, Langley became an Atlantic City resident after graduating from Brooklyn College with a degree in hotel administration. He was employed by the Haddon Hall Hotel, which later became Resorts International, where he was a hotel cashiering shift supervisor. In 1993, Langley was honored as "Supervisor of the Year."

Langley was also a community activist, campaigning to force city government to enforce laws and remove crack houses in his neighborhood.

He is survived by his mother, Barbara.

A memorial service was held March 18 in Atlantic City. Memorial contributions may be sent to the American Cancer Society, 3129 Fire Road, Cardiff, N.J. 18234. ▼

Donald Lambert died Nov. 15 of complications from AIDS in Silverlake, Calif. He was 50. Born in Manchester, N.H., he attended colleges in California. He served two tours of duty in the United States Air Force in Vietnam. As a successful landscaper, his ability to create beauty and growth in a garden was unparalleled; his clientele included the upper echelons of Los Angeles society. Lambert is survived by four brothers, two sisters, several nieces, grand-nieces, grand-nephews, his dear friend Dale Jackson and many other friends. 95

1-11-96

Jonathan R. Lax was known for his wide range of friendships. The following are comments from friends and associates who mourned his death:

Timothy Harple, friend and lover: "He was always vivacious. He saw life as an opportunity to sort out its mysterious challenges."

Chris Bartlett, friend: "He was always self-effacing. We used to get these anonymous donations at ACT UP. We knew it was him."

Judy Claude, friend: "Jonathan was a fighter for justice who believed in having fun. He wasn't a fuddy-duddy. He let people know you could dance at the revolution. It's OK."

David Fair, friend: "He reminded drug companies that they were dealing with human beings, not guinea pigs. He took a holistic approach to AIDS and was very active with alternate therapies. And he regularly donated to We The People."

Nan Feyler, friend: "Jonathan learned his HIV status because he applied for life insurance. When he called the agent back, that's when he was told he was HIV-infected. That outrageous, thoughtless conduct motivated him to join the AIDS Law Project board; he was a key member for many years. He provided us with valuable guidance as someone living with the virus."

Mike Kachur, friend: "He was incredibly generous with his time and energy. He knew the full gamut of AIDS treatment and was very generous in sharing that information with others."

Myles Kelly, friend and business associate: "He was a great mentor for everybody. He could be difficult to deal with at times, but when you thought about it, you realized he was probably right."

Kiyoshi Kuromiya, friend: "He was a real pioneer in a lot of different areas, going back to the '80s. I feel a great sense of loss."

Bonnie O'Connor, friend: "Jonathan was real important in getting a lot of AIDS studies up and running. Most doctors and drug company reps aren't bilingual. They can't talk to regular people. He couldn't tolerate that. He humanized the system and tried to make it respond to what real people really need."

Judy Rappaport, friend: "Jonathan had guts. He did a lot of work behind the scenes that nobody knows about. A phone call from Jonathan could get the job done. He understood that every person has personal power, and he knew how to harness his."

Jane Shull, friend: "Jonathan was not a person who would have been an activist if AIDS didn't happen. But it did happen, and instead of selfishly trying to find a cure just for himself, he turned his own need into action on behalf of everyone. As a participant in several drug trials, he paved the way for others. He did whatever he thought was necessary to stay alive."

Rick Wilson, friend: "I recently was laid off, and rather than pour sympathy on me, Jonathan immediately gave me ideas on what to do next. That was his way of being supportive." ▼

Jerome "Jerry" R. Lord
Oct. 4, 1958 - June 26, 1996

One of the last original party boys has left this existence and made his way toward that big cocktail lounge in the sky. Jerry enjoyed his life to the fullest. He loved rock and roll and new wave punk. On Sunday afternoons, you could find him watching either a football or baseball game in one of the Polk Street bars, and if not watching a game, he was probably playing a mean game of pool.

Jerry was born in San Jose, Calif., and lived most of his 37 years in Cupertino. He attended Cupertino High School, graduating in 1976. It was then that he made such lifelong friends as Dave Lincoln, Michael Woods and Linda Baker.

The two great loves of his life were Luther Shultz of Manteca and Bob Cavanaugh of San Francisco. Luther was his love as a young man, and Bob was the love of his lifetime.

Douglas R. Long

Dec. 9, 1956 - Jan. 3, 1996

Our dear friend Doug died Wednesday afternoon, January 3. He was a kind, gentle, fun-loving person, and we will miss him.

Doug was born and raised in Waynesboro, Pa. After graduating from high school in 1974, he set out to find his own place in the world. Doug lived in Washington, D.C., Phoenix and Los Angeles until he decided to move to San Francisco in 1988 to be with his San Francisco friends, whom he thought of as "family."

Doug was employed by Zephyr Real Estate as office administrator until late 1994 when complications from AIDS made it necessary for him to devote most of his time to doctor's visits.

In early 1995, Doug met and fell in love with Jim, an incredible man who loved him, cared for him, and treated him with respect and compassion.

Jim, we thank you! On behalf of Doug we also thank J.B., the staff at San Francisco General Hospital and the staff at VNH for the wonderful care they gave Doug.

Doug is also survived by his mother, three brothers and their families, all of Waynesboro, Pa.

Good-bye, Doug. Give everyone our love. ▼

In Loving Memory

Paul Lythgoe

Aug. 17, 1954 - Aug. 20, 1989

Garey Lambert, 49, executive editor of The Baltimore Alternative, died January 19 at Johns Hopkins Hospital of complications associated with AIDS, according to The Baltimore Sun. 96

Lambert joined The Baltimore Alternative, a monthly newspaper serving the Gay community, shortly after it was founded in 1986. In his consecutive positions as associate editor, editor, and executive editor, Lambert shaped the Alternative's editorial policy. He was eventually the newspaper's primary editorial writer.

Lambert was also active in the AIDS community and wrote an AIDS Update column for the Alternative. He co-founded AIDS Action Baltimore, and served on the Johns Hopkins AIDS Service Community Advisory Board, the Ryan White Planning Council, and the AIDS Clinical Trials Test Group at the National Institutes of Health. He also chaired the Board for Baltimore Trials, which conducts community-based clinical research in AIDS, and served on the board of the Chase-Brexton Clinic and the Mayor's AIDS Coordinating Council.

Working as a projectionist at Baltimore's Charles Theater, which specializes in independent and foreign films, Lambert met and became friends with openly Gay director, John Waters.

"He was the Harvey Milk of Baltimore," Waters told The Sun. "Even in the end, he could stir things up."

Lambert was born in Alexandria, Va. After graduating from the University of Baltimore with an English degree, he served three years with the Army. While stationed in Germany, he was an announcer for Armed Forces Radio. He picked up the microphone again for WCBM Baltimore, where he worked for about a year.

In addition to Grau and Waters, Lambert is survived by his partner, David VanderMark, also of Baltimore, and family. Lambert's remains will be cremated and the ashes will be scattered on the banks of the York River in Virginia. A memorial service is being planned. (Baltimore Sun)

Kevin G. LeClair

After a long battle, Kevin ("Figgy" to many of his friends) passed away Feb. 17 at the Shattuck Hospital in Jamaica Plain. The caregivers at the Shattuck praised Kevin for his perseverance and his medical knowledge, dubbing him "Dr. LeClair."

We would like to thank those caregivers for helping Kevin and his friends through this difficult time.

Kevin came to Boston after getting his degree in engineering from UMass. He always had the knack for knowing how something worked. He applied that knack while working for the Chandler Inn and Fritz for over 10 years.

We will all remember Figgy for his quick wit, his ever-present sense of humor, and his ever-present baseball cap.

A celebration of Kevin's life is planned for Sunday, March 10 at 4 p.m. at Leslie Memorial Chapel, 15 Newbury St., Boston. 96

Andrew ("Drew") Lambert

January 16, 1996

Andrew ("Drew") Lambert, 33, died on Jan. 16 of complications from treatments he received for AIDS-related lymphoma. He was surrounded by his mother, sister and many loving friends.

Originally from Los Angeles, Drew moved to San Francisco in 1989. He finished his college degree in theater at San Francisco State in 1990. For several years he worked as a dresser and wardrobe designer for the San Francisco Opera as well as for many shows, including Phantom of the Opera. In 1994 he directed the Al-Anon Musical, and during the past year, he worked at Mr. S Leather.

In the years since his diagnosis with AIDS in 1986, Drew worked relentlessly on his spiritual growth and development. At the time of his death, he had made peace with his God, his family and his many friends.

A celebration of Drew's life will take place on Feb. 25 at 11 a.m. at the AIDS Memorial Grove. All are welcome. Those desiring to make contributions in memory of Drew may do so by making checks payable to the AIDS Memorial Grove, clearly marked for the Drew Lambert Memorial Circle of Friends Inscription, 856 Stanyan Street, San Francisco, CA 94117. ▼

Steven C. Levy

Steven C. Levy, 39, of Atlanta, passed away Friday, March 15, after a long struggle due to complications resulting from AIDS.

Steve moved to Atlanta in 1979 after graduating from Clemson University and the Graduate School of Business at the University of Georgia. He enjoyed an outstanding career at both Coca-Cola Enterprises and The Coca-Cola Co., serving in a variety of marketing capacities both in Atlanta and Dallas. Steve was a member of All Saints Episcopal Church and was pivotal in initiating the AIDS Task Force at the Cathedral of St. Philip. He often volunteered at Project Open Hand, AIDS Survival Project, AID Atlanta and a number of other AIDS-related organizations in Atlanta and Dallas.

He is survived by his parents, Frank A. Levy, Sr. and Barbara C. Levy of McLean, Virginia; two brothers, Frank Jr. and Michael; one niece, one nephew and a host of loving friends. The family has requested that memorials to Steve be made to Haven House Midtown, Inc., 250 14th St., Atlanta, GA 30309.

Billy Leary

William Leary, 49, of Alexandria, Virginia, died Wednesday, February 14, 1996 at the Washington Home due to complications associated with AIDS, according to his close friend, David Ramsey of Alexandria.

Leary was born on March 28, 1946 in Portsmouth, Va., where he was raised and educated. He joined the Navy shortly after finishing high school, and was honorably discharged in the mid-1960s, Ramsey said.

After his discharge, Leary worked as a window dresser for the former Jeleff and Kann's department store in downtown D.C., and as a custodian for the Lost and Found bar in Southeast D.C. Leary for the past 15 years worked as a supervisor in the bindery department at Beaver Press in D.C.

A noted drag performer, Leary over the past 25 years was a member of the Awards Club, a drag performance club through which he won several contests and pageants, including one for Miss Gay America, said Ramsey. Performing under the name "Catherine Deneuve," Leary also performed at benefits and fundraisers "whenever he was asked," Ramsey said.

Known by friends as "Giggles," Leary will be remembered for his zany alter egos, including one named "Aunt Hattie," Ramsey said. Leary also enjoyed singing. Md.; other relatives and his friend, Jennifer Bradley of Los Angeles.

Funeral services were held Feb. 12 at B'nai Israel Congregation in Rockville. His remains were buried at B'nai Israel Cemetery in Oxon Hill, Md.

Richard K. Lewis

A memorial service will be held April 12 for Richard Lewis, 42, of Stone Mountain, who died March 25. The service will be held at 7 p.m. at Christ Covenant Metropolitan Community Church, 788 Rays Rd., Stone Mountain. 96

A computer technician retired from Bell South after 23 years of service, Lewis was a member of Zion Baptist Church in Covington and attended Christ Covenant MCC. He is survived by a daughter, Noelle Lewis of Cumming; his companion, Logan Nicholson; parents, Horace and Jean Lewis of Rockdale County; four brothers, Dean, Ted, Andy and Tony, all of Rockdale, and many friends, including Greg Worley, Robert Moore, Ron Roberts, Wayne Cook, Terry Hodges and James Stottlemire.

In lieu of flowers, donations may be made to the Christ Covenant Building Fund or Project Open Hand.

Thomas Vincent Landgraf

Oct. 8, 1959 - Feb. 11, 1996

One of a kind very seldom comes along; Tom was one of them. He and I met in Houston in the summer of 1984. Our journey together took us from Houston to Dallas and finally San Francisco in 1986. Although our partnership living together ended in 1989, in both our hearts it never really ended. We in some strange way still considered each other the significant other.

Tom moved on at 5:30 p.m. on Feb. 11. One of his final wishes was to see and pet his other partner, his dog Madeline. This wish was fulfilled and left me with one of the most memorable moments of our life together.

Special thanks to all those who Tom loved who aided me in dealing with all the heartaches that accompany this part of life that we all face. These individuals are truly God's people: Dr. Lee Lisky, Chris, Carol, Sherry, Leo, Trevor, Jeff - and very special thanks to Keith for being there 100 percent.

For information about the memorial service, please call John at 415/626-7179.

Tom, remember our saying to one another, you will forever remain my one and only. Until we meet again. - Love, Michael ▼

CHRISTINA LEWIS, 28, died of AIDS on January 6 in 97 Washington, DC. Lewis joined the staff of the National Association of People with AIDS (NAPWA) in 1990. She organized the NAPWA speakers bureau and directed community-education and technical-assistance programs designed to help people with HIV take control of their lives. She served as a national spokesperson for NAPWA and made regular appearances on television news programs. As a PWA, she attended the Berlin International AIDS Conference in 1993 and the Yokohama International AIDS Conference in 1995 as a delegate representing NAPWA.

Joseph Loadholt

Joseph Cornell Loadholt, 40, playwright, novelist, and former D.C. resident, died of AIDS-related complications on Wednesday, April 3, 1996, according to his friend Gary Walker of D.C.

Loadholt was born January 21, 1956, in Allendale County, S.C. In 1978, he graduated from the U.S. Coast Guard Academy in New London, Conn., and served as second lieutenant. He retired from the Coast Guard Reserves in 1994.

According to Walker, Loadholt was the author of three plays: I've Got a Mind to Ramble (1991), Captain! (1992), and New World Symphony (1993). The first two pieces were set to music and performed off-Broadway in New York. He also wrote the novel Island of Four Mountains, currently out of print. Loadholt founded and edited B & G Magazine, a New York City publication which focused on the diversity of American culture. Loadholt served as the executive director of the Black United Way Fund of New York's United Way Campaign, and he operated a theater production company, Loadholt and Anderson Inc., according to Walker. He was artistic director of the South Carolina Playwrights Center in Beaufort.

Loadholt also is survived by his mother, Eva; brother, John; sister and brother-in-law, Yvonne and MacArthur Deloach; grandmother, Eva Mae Williams; and many other relatives and friends.

A memorial service was held Tuesday, April 9, 1996 at Mt. Sinai Baptist Church in Beaufort, S.C. His remains were interred.

Carmen Lamberto

Carmen E. Lamberto, 31, of Washington, D.C., died from AIDS related complications at George Washington University Hospital in D.C. on Thursday, May 2, 1996, according to his lover of five years Mark Hengstler, also of D.C.

Lamberto was born in Dennville, N.J., on Jan. 30, 1965, and grew up in Parsippany, N.J. He graduated from the University of Maryland College Park in 1988. He was in his fourth year of studies in a master's degree in social work program at Catholic University before suspending his studies due to illness last year, Hengstler said.

Adventurous and energetic, Lamberto often mixed his passion for travel with his penchant for scuba diving. He visited Greece and France, and took several trips to the Caribbean, where he explored the deep ocean waters despite his fear of sharks, Hengstler said. His favorite underwater encounters were with the brightly colored parrot fish, said Hengstler.

Lamberto also enjoyed preparing gourmet French and Italian food for dinner parties with friends.

"His friends were really important to him," said Hengstler.

Prior to his illness, Lamberto worked with disabled children at the Close Up Foundation in Northern Virginia, and with disabled children at Club Camp in New Jersey, Hengstler said.

Lamberto also is survived by his mother and father, Carole and Carmen Lamberto; and brother, David Lamberto, all of Parsippany, N.J. He is survived by many close friends, and by his beloved pugs, Laslo and Lula.

JEFFREY LETTOW, entertainment editor of the Northern California newspaper Marin Independent Journal, died March 14 after a bout of Pneumocystis carinii pneumonia (PCP). The 43-year-old Chicago native moved to California in 1984, where he joined the San Francisco Gay Men's Chorus and volunteered at Food for Thought, and at the Kaiser Hospital in Santa Rosa, teaching Internet use for HIV research. Described by his brother Bill as a "gregarious guy who loved people," Lettow traveled widely with his partner, Tom Elleray. He was an outspoken supporter of Proposition 215, the medical-marijuana initiative passed by California voters in 1996. "Jeff felt that people with terminal illnesses should have that option," Elleray said.

Michael Luke

Michael David Luke, 30, died Sunday, April 14, 1996, of AIDS-related complications at his home in Arlington, Va., according to his friend, Chris Perkins. Friends, family, and his much-loved dog Eli were at his side when he died.

Luke was born on Jan. 9, 1966, in Dallas, Texas. His family moved to Vienna, Va., and he attended Madison High School, where he became an accomplished clarinet player. He continued his playing at George Mason University, where he studied music and business. He went on to receive an associate's degree in hotel management from Northern Virginia Community College in 1992. Luke worked as hotel manager at the Quality Inn Iwo Jima in Rosslyn, and then began working at Loew's L'Enfant Plaza in 1991. He left Loew's in June 1995 when he retired on disability.

Luke had a broad range of interests, including classical music, computers, German food and culture, automobiles (especially Corvettes), fishing, Deep South road trips, and outdoor activities.

In addition to Perkins of Atlanta, Luke is survived by his partner of nine years, Steven Williams; his parents, Michael and Joan Luke of Vienna, Va.; his sister, Elizabeth Lewis of Dallas, Texas; and his friend, Patrick Fisher of D.C.

A wake and rosary were held at the Money and King Funeral Home in Vienna on April 16. Funeral services were held April 17 at Our Lady of Good Counsel Church, also in Vienna. Interment will be at the family cemetery in Albuquerque, N.M. Contributions in Luke's name can be made to Food and Friends, 58 L St., SE, Washington, DC 20003.

Linton Lee

Linton Williams Lee, 34, a resident of Warrenton, Virginia, died Monday, February 5, 1996 of AIDS-related complications at Fairfax Hospital, according to his partner, Ray Mason of Warrenton.

Lee was born Oct. 26, 1961 in Orlando, Fla. He graduated from Stonewall Jackson High School in Manassas, Va., and majored in English at George Mason University in Fairfax, Va.

From 1990-95, he worked as an international reservation agent for United Airlines in Sterling, Va. Lee enjoyed traveling, especially to Hawaii. He also made several trips to England where he enjoyed searching for antiques in London flea markets. With Mason, he operated an antiques business in Culpeper, Va. At the time of Lee's death, the couple was in the process of renovating their newly purchased home.

A lover of science fiction books, Lee founded in 1991 the Manassas-based Cosmic Bookstore, which specialized in the science fiction genre. He later sold the store. Lee was a member of Lambda Sci Fi, the D.C. chapter of the national organization Gaylaxians.

In addition to Mason, Lee is survived by his parents, Betty W. and Walter H. Lee Jr. of Haymarket, Va.; one brother, Walter H. Lee III of Pelham, Ala.; one sister, Sara Lee Adams of Little Rock, Ark.; several nieces and nephews; and Mason's son, Jordan of Charlottesville, Va.

Bob Lay

SALINA, Kan. (AP) — A pastor who earned national notoriety for performing a marriage ceremony for two men has died from an apparent heart attack.

Bob Lay died Sept. 20. He was 59.

Lay had undergone bypass surgery this summer and was in Wichita a few weeks ago discussing a possible heart transplant, said Tom Hedges, a friend.

Lay had been pastor of Sunrise Presbyterian Church until July 1993. He resigned following a controversy that developed after he officiated a marriage ceremony

After his resignation, he founded the Center for Psychology and Religion in Salina.

George Pyle, editor of the Salina Journal during the gay marriage controversy and now the paper's editorial page editor, said Lay was special.

"He had a real concern for the way people felt and at the same time had a curiosity for what made them tick," Pyle said.

GARY L. LUCAS, 42, community leader, died last month at the Northwestern Memorial Hospital Hospice. Compassion for others was a driving force in Gary's life, dedicating his efforts toward human rights and the prevention of child abuse. Owner of the Robert-Lucas Salon, Gary took great pride in nurturing Chicago's business and cultural interests, serving on the Oak Street Business Council and supporting Friends of Conservation.

Gary was a champion for those fighting AIDS. He co-chaired the 1994 dinner for the Human Rights Fund to generate support and increase awareness for those fighting discrimination. He was also active on fundraising committees for Howard Brown Memorial Clinic.

As a member of the Chicago board of the National Committee to Prevent Child Abuse, Gary co-chaired the organization's annual fundraising benefit in 1991 and 1992 and participated in the organization's drive to provide supplies and infant support for the North Lawndale Community Program.

He was born in North Judson, Ind., attended Ball State University and was a member of North Judson Lodge #438 F&AM, and the Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite Valley of South Bend, IN.

Survivors include his partner Stephen Majsak, parents Marian and Perry Lucas of North Judson, sister Pamela Stalbaum, niece and nephews Mara, Douglas and Andrew Stalbaum of Florida, aunt Shirley Sims as well as the many friends and family who shared in his love and his courageous fight against AIDS. Memorials: Open Hand; National Committee to Prevent Child Abuse. ☞

Kenneth Ray Lerner

April 15, 1939 - Sept. 1, 1996

Born in St. Charles, Mich., Ken is survived by his mother and brother, Edna and Ernie Lerner, and sister, Linda Simpson. He was predeceased by siblings, Dennis and Ruth Ann, and father, Robert Lerner, all of Michigan. His ashes were sent to his mother for family services and interment.

Settling in the Bay Area after his U.S. Army service, Ken pursued a successful career as a building engineer, employed for the last 13 years by San Mateo County. He was active in the national Association for Facilities Engineers, energetically presiding as president of Chapter 15. When declining health forced him to resign, the association honored him with a plaque commemorating the foundation of The Kenneth Lerner Memorial Scholarship.

Ken loved to party with his friends, and was always the first to volunteer to bring his famous potato salad and to create colorful, computer-generated promotional signage and fliers. Typical of Ken's generous nature, one of his last wishes was to provide a Celebration of Life for his many friends at Linda Pancost's Phone Booth. Friends are invited to join us Saturday, Oct. 5, at 4 p.m. to share fond and happy memories of Ken.

Tom Leishman

Thomas L. Leishman Jr., 37, died from complications associated with AIDS on Sunday, June 16, 1996, at his Capitol Hill home surrounded by friends, family, and his partner of 11 years, John Berry, according to Leishman's friend Dan Anderson, also of D.C.

Leishman was born in Charleston, W.Va., and attended the Shutz School of Alexandria, Egypt, where he developed a lifelong love for the country.

"He cherished his memories of horseback rides to the pyramids of Giza, treks through the Temple of Karnak, felucca sails on the Nile, and strolls through the spice markets of the Khan Khallili market in Cairo," Anderson said.

He also attended the University of Charleston in Charleston, W.Va., and moved to the D.C. area in 1982. He worked as a production designer for Polo Magazine, and later as director of publications for the American College of Obstetrics and Gynecology.

He was an active member of the D.C. Sports Tennis league, where his "wicked backhand slice was matched only by his sharp wit," said Anderson. He was also an avid gardener who held a long-standing admiration for former first lady and fellow flower aficionado Claudia "Lady Bird" Johnson.

Leishman spoke for years of his desire to meet Mrs. Johnson. His wish came true a week before his death, when Mrs. Johnson happened to be visiting the Washington Hospice Center. She stopped and spoke with Leishman about their mutual interest in horticulture, Anderson said.

Leishman will be remembered as a "person of action," Anderson said, recalling how Leishman overcame his fear of heights one year when he scaled the "Exorcist" wall in Georgetown to remove a homophobic banner.

"Tom's death leaves a void in the many lives he touched," said Anderson.

A funeral was held in D.C. on June 19.

Joe Lyle

Joseph Wilburn Lyle, 23, died unexpectedly at his Washington, D.C. home on Friday, June 21, 1996, according to his partner, Dave Selover. He declined to disclose the cause of death.

Lyle was born Joseph Wilburn Gower III on Oct. 20, 1972 in Baltimore. As a child he moved with his family to Maryland, Colorado, Texas, Georgia, and Michigan, and attended colleges in Utah, Michigan, and Turkey.

In 1992, he enlisted in the Air Force, where he served as an aircraft structural maintenance technician while stationed in Japan and Idaho. He also served in Operation Desert Storm where he was based in Turkey. He attained the rank of sergeant before he was honorably discharged for being Gay on May 17, 1996, Selover said.

At the time of his death, he was working as a waiter at a local restaurant and was planning to attend Montgomery Community College in Rockville, Md. He wanted to obtain a degree in secondary education, so he could teach German and Russian to children.

Lyle was a Life Scout and, as an adult, remained active with the Boy Scouts. He was a student of karate. According to Selover, Lyle was also adept at repairing automobiles, a skill Lyle wanted to perfect when he returned to college.

Selover said Lyle had suffered from depression.

In addition to Selover, Lyle is survived by his mother, Jeanne M. Lyle of Marquette, Mich.; father, Joseph W. Gower Jr. of Leland, Miss.; stepfather, James E. Grubbs of Hurst, Texas; brothers, M. David Lyle of Cambridge, Md.; Jamie A. Lyle of Marquette; and sisters, Michele D. Lyle-Glaser of Marquette; and Elizabeth J. Lyle Balascio, of Cambridge; and many other relatives and friends.

Chauncey H. Lyles Jr., a feisty organizer within the black and Gay communities, died at Georgetown University Hospital from AIDS related complications on Friday, June 21, 1996. He was 40 years old.

A fifth generation Washingtonian born in D.C. on October 8, 1955, Lyles held an enduring appreciation of the District's black cultural history. He was a fervent Gay activist and organizer known for his ability to bridge the gap between the black and Gay communities, and will be remembered for his enthusiasm, creativity, style, and temper tantrums.

"Chauncey was like something out of a Bette Davis movie," said Phil Pannell, longtime Gay activist and Ward 8 civic leader. "He had the type of personality that would test the sturdiest set of friends. But when he had an idea in his head, he saw it through to fruition."

He founded the Remembering U Street Festival in 1993, the annual Christmas In My Soul gospel concerts, the Black Lesbian and Gay Masquerade Gala, and participated in the first Adams Morgan Day festival. Lyles also redesigned and improved the souvenir program for Black Lesbian and Gay Pride Day, and published one of the area's first Black Gay magazines, The Black Guide.

"He was a builder of bridges," said friend and AIDS activist Greg Hutchings. "He always took different sides of the community and bridged them together."

Lyles's appreciation of U Street's rich cultural history led to his creation of the annual Remembering U Street Festival, a yearly salute to the area's renowned jazz and theater background. It was a testimony to Lyles's commitment to the black and the Gay black communities, as he ensured a Gay presence at the festival by inviting the D.C. Coalition to staff an information booth.

Lyles also bolstered support for AIDS service organizations within the black community.

"He was very angry that more black people were not taking the AIDS epidemic more seriously," said Carlene Cheatam, president of Black Lesbian and Gay Pride. In 1991 Lyles organized the first annual "Christmas in My Soul" gospel concert, which combined several area gospel choirs to help raise money for black AIDS service organizations.

"He was an advocate for African American men in

by Doug Hinckle

terms of AIDS services," said Jim Graham, executive director of the Whitman-Walker Clinic. "He'd call me about his views and his reactions to things. It was very constructive."

Lyles for years pushed the clinic to extend into Anacostia. The lobbying paid off when the clinic in 1992 opened its Max Robinson Center.

But the "bridges" Lyles built were shaky at best, some say, as he was forever burning them.

"Chauncey had demons that got in the way," said Michael Saint-Andress, performance artist and AIDS activist. He said Lyles was known to cause scenes at his well-attended fundraisers by blowing up at someone during them. Saint-Andress said he forgave Lyles because of his obvious devotion to the Gay and black communities.

"Until the day he died, he was part of the struggle," he said: At a recent fundraiser in Lyles's honor, for example, Lyles stuffed hundreds of envelopes for the U Street Festival while friends, adversaries, and acquaintances each went to the microphone and spoke about the controversial organizer.

"Everyone pretty much said that he was a pain in the ass, but that you gotta love him," said Sheila Reid, who worked with Lyles on the Black Pride souvenir guide. "He just sat there and nodded his head. He knew it was all true. But he kept stuffing those envelopes and made sure other people helped. That's how he was; forever pushing on."

Those who knew Lyles will likely have two Chauncey Lyles stories, said Pannell; a positive and a negative one. Cheatam, for example, said Lyles brought the Black Pride souvenir program "to another level" by making it "bigger, better, and more expansive."

"There were times when Chauncey was a charmer, but there were times when he was a devil," she said. "You never knew who he was going to be."

Renowned poet Dolores Kendrick remembers Lyles as a "creative and enthusiastic student" when she once served as his junior high school teacher.

"I saw his creativity and his potential," she said, recalling how Lyles worked with her on a film that focused on students in the inner city. "He was very faithful and loyal [to the project]. He seemed to have an urgent creativity in him."

During his illness, Lyles was proud and fiercely independent. And although he criticized the black community's silence around the AIDS crisis, in the end, he downplayed his own struggle with the disease.

"He downplayed ...his pain in his last days," said Saint-Andress.

Lyles one rainy night left his hospital bed to make his way to a bar he frequented on U Street.

"It was nothing to go into a club and see Chauncey all frail and gaunt, sipping a drink and smoking a cigarette," said Pannell. "He didn't want to be alone."

Lyles is survived by his mother, Ernestine Leake Lyles of D.C.; three sisters, Sandra C. Jenkins of Richmond, Va., Patricia D. Matthews, and Sheila M. Darnell, both of Mitchellville, Md.; one brother, Victor C. Lyles; grandmother Mary Leake, both of D.C.; and many other relatives and friends.

A memorial service was held in D.C. on June 27. His remains will be cremated and the ashes will be scattered on U Street during the third annual festival in the fall.

"He wasn't an easy person to love," said Cheatam. "He challenged you. He pissed you off. But people will miss him. His creative abilities were unmeasured by anyone I have seen in the Gay and Lesbian community. I loved him very much."

Ed Lissitz

Edwin Roy Lissitz, 50, died at his home in Woodbridge, Virginia on Monday, June 17, 1996, from cancer-related ailments, according to Dan Casalova, his companion of 24 years.

Lissitz was born in Chicago, Ill., on Sept. 26, 1945, and grew up in Los Angeles, Calif. He enlisted in the U.S. Army in 1965 and served in West Germany and Vietnam. Lissitz returned to California after completing his military service in 1969 and later graduated from California State University.

Lissitz worked in the health insurance industry for 25 years, including as chairperson of the Los Angeles Claims Association, as cofounder of the Western Claims Conference, and most recently as an account manager for National Claims Administrative Services in Fairfax.

Lissitz moved to the D.C. area with Casalova in 1990, and has served on the Community Advisory Board of the Whitman-Walker Clinic of Northern Virginia, the board of directors of the Prince William Gay and Lesbian Association, and served as vice-president of the Pioneer Brotherhood, a Gay men's organization, Casalova said.

In addition to Casalova, Lissitz is survived by his sister and brother-in-law, Marilyn and Lloyd Reynolds of Los Angeles, and their six children.

Vincent LoPiccolo, 60 Back Bay psychotherapist

Vincent LoPiccolo, a psychotherapist whose career also included operating a clothing store and working as a chef, died Thursday of AIDS-related lymphoma in his Back Bay home. He was 60.

He was born in New York City. After graduating from high school, he joined the US Army Airborne.

After being discharged, he earned a bachelor's degree at St.

VINCENT LOPICCOLO

John's University in New York and attended Parsons School of Design.

He was a merchandise manager for Allied Corp. before opening a clothing shop, Piccolo Place, in New York City.

He moved to Massachusetts in 1970 and took a job as a chef at Locke-Ober Cafe in Boston. In 1974 and 1975 he was chef and owner of The Porch restaurant on Nantucket.

He then earned a bachelor's degree in psychology at Clark University, a master's degree in education at Boston University and did post-graduate work at the Psychoanalytic Institute of New England before becoming a psychotherapist in private practice. He also worked for the Massachusetts departments of Mental Health and Mental Retardation.

He leaves his partner of 26 years, Gary L. Sandison, and a brother, Joseph, of Toms River, N.J.

A service will be held Aug. 18 at 4 p.m. in Trinity Church in Copley Square.

Daniel G. Lord

June 4, 1996

On June 4, Daniel G. Lord, with elegance and grace, passed over to the other side following a courageous 2-1/2 year battle with AIDS. He leaves behind a legacy of selfless, unconditional love for his family and close friends, as well as a genuine concern for life and humanity.

Before moving to California, Daniel pursued a physical education degree at McGill University in his hometown, Montreal, Canada. Upon arrival in San Francisco, he tended bar at the Badlands, where he worked until his retirement in 1994.

With Daniel in loving support during his last month of life were his mother, Lucille, and brother, Michael. In his final hours, he was also joined by his father; sister, Sandra; and nephew (and namesake), Daniel. Dear friends George, Daniel, John, Christian, Randy and Liza were blessed to be able to help him prepare for his next adventure.

In keeping with his wishes, no formal service was held. Family and friends spread his ashes at Jenner on a beautiful glorious day, Wednesday, June 12.

Danny, we love you...Godspeed...

In Loving Memory of John Milton Lehman

October 17, 1937 - July 14, 1996

Through the passing of our years,

The joys, our sorrows, and many tears.

Our times we've shared and been together,

Made the best times even better.

At first I saw a bright light shone,

Then I knew I'd walk alone.

John & David

And now my life has come to end,

An I must walk around that bend.

Do not fret or mourn for me,

Cause I'll live eternally.

- David Jones

Thanks for 19 1/2 years.

I'll always love you!

Edd Liddle "Mr. Edd"

Aug. 22, 1941 - Oct. 24, 1996

Grand Duke XVII, the Leather Teddy Bear. Mr. Edd was born in Honolulu and reared all over California. He finally landed in SF in the late 1960s, where he became quite active South of Market.

Edd later moved to Fresno, where he managed a local health spa. He returned to SF and, in 1986, was Mr. Cowboy along with Ms. Cowgirl, Cathy Brandt. He also ran for Grand Duke and won, enjoying a very successful year with Grand Duchess Davida.

Edd will especially be missed by all his friends at the 5,000 games and the wonderful members of his bowling team, the SF Bears.

Mr. Edd leaves a myriad of friends, including his domestic partner, Lonnie West; Davida; dog, Aldo; best friend, J.J. Van Dyck; his cowgirl, Cathy; dear friend, Dinky Don; David Merker; Steve Kilbo; Bobby Vierra; Lynn Guyette; and Jacqui Jewels.

He also leaves his mother, Mary Szczech; his uncle and "aunt," Adolph and Norma; brothers, William and Michael; and sisters, Mary, Martha and Teresa.

JAY LEWIS' friend, Grant Peterson, was "shocked but not surprised" when the Sonoma, California artist took his own life July 24 at age 63. "Jay had neuropathy," Peterson said. "It [got] into his hands and he couldn't work." Lewis' career began in 1959 when he was invited to exhibit his paintings at a gallery in South Korea during an Army stint. Back in California, Lewis scraped for a living until his work won worldwide recognition. His final project, "The Found Civilization," involved sculptures made from bits and pieces of "disposable America." "Jay never looked straight ahead," said Peterson. "He kept his eyes on the ground, looking for bottle caps, nuts, bones and other such pieces, which he would make into glorious art." 48

James Ken Lynch

J. Ken Lynch of Cambridge, died Feb. 28 at Deaconess Hospital in Boston awaiting a liver transplant.

Ken was born to Jean Renzi in Baltimore on May 14, 1949. At an early age he moved to Yonkers, NY. He was the oldest of 4 brothers: Wayne, Mark and the late Bruce Lynch. He enjoyed painting while attending Yonkers High and after graduating in 1976, furthered his art studies on a scholarship at Westchester Community College.

Ken fell in love with Boston when he moved here in 1978. He worked the front desk as night supervisor and auditor at the Essex Hotel until 1984. The next 7 years he advanced in his career at the Copley Plaza Hotel. His warm smile and charm landed him first behind the front desk as reception clerk and training supervisor. He then became the assistant director of Convention Services, and was promoted further to credit manager where he made many lasting friendships. After leaving the Copley Plaza he was employed as credit manager of the Colonade Hotel until 1993.

Ken touched our lives in many ways. Always the life of the party, he never turned down the opportunity to pull up the rugs and dance. He will always be remembered as a loyal and giving friend, living life to the fullest, be it painting, dancing, or basking in the sunshine riding his bike around his beloved Boston.

Ken passed peacefully to the next life surrounded by the love and support of companions, Richard and Chuck, and dear friends Michael and John. Ken leaves behind many valued friends and loving family who cared and supported him through his ordeal: his mother, Jean and stepfather Charles Germano; brother Mark Lynch and family, all of Yonkers NY; brother Wayne and his wife Cathy Lynch and family of Ridgefield CT; and his friends, Al, David, Hank, Fernando, Brenda and Lisa.

On Tuesday, March 28 at 6 p.m. on the second floor chapel a memorial mass will be held at St. Anthony's Shrine, Arch St., Boston.

The spark in Ken's eyes and his hearty laughter will forever burn and echo in our hearts.

Winston Lane

Dr. George Winston Lane Jr., 43, of Washington, D.C., died at Georgetown University Hospital on Wednesday, August 14, 1996, of AIDS-related complications, according to his close friend Candy Fletcher of D.C.

Lane was born in Florence, S.C., on March 22, 1953, and grew up in Lamar, S.C. He graduated from Wofford College in Spartanburg, S.C., and earned a Ph.D. in American History from Emory University in Atlanta, Ga.

He moved to Washington in 1989 and most recently served as administrative assistant to the president of the National Trust for Historic Preservation in D.C.

"He was a very knowledgeable and very supportive person to work with," said his friend and coworker Audra Hicks. "He was always willing to lend his assistance to anyone who needed it."

Lane was an American colonial history buff who enjoyed visiting historical properties and museums in the D.C. area, said Hicks. He enjoyed reading English murder mysteries and writing his own short stories, said Fletcher.

Fletcher said she will miss Lane's keen wit and sarcastic humor. He had a tasteful, "regal" sense of style that earned him the nickname "Fred Astaire," said Hicks.

"He was such a dignified person," she said. "We used to call him the Fred Astaire of the office because of the way he carried himself. He was very proud. We were all very sad by the fact that he passed away so quickly. We weren't able to love him as long as we wanted to."

Lane was predeceased by his father, George W. Lane Sr. He is survived by his mother, Frances G. Lane, and maternal grandmother, Etta Green, both of Fayetteville, N.C., and many friends.

A graveside service was held Aug. 22 in Lamar, S.C. A memorial service will take place locally in September. Contributions in his name may be made to the Whitman-Walker Clinic, 1407 S St., NW, Washington, DC 20009.

AIDS Quilt of Grief on Capital Mall

By DAVID W. DUNLAP

WASHINGTON, Oct. 12 — A carpet of grief covered the nation's front yard this weekend.

For the first time in the nine-year existence of the AIDS Memorial Quilt, a vast patchwork commemoration of those who have died, the grief was tempered by the growing hope that AIDS might be transformed into a manageable disease through new antiviral drug therapies and genetic research.

But there was no such hope for the family of Craig Steven Rowe of Woodside, Queens. "I'm very angry," said his sister, Renee, of Brooklyn. "I wish they could have found something sooner."

Moments later, she pinned a three-by-six-foot panel honoring her brother, who died last year at the age of 32, alongside those for Andrew J. Stone, who also died last year, and Peter Quinn Loughlin, who died in March.

Since the AIDS quilt was last unfurled in its entirety four years ago, around the base of the Washington Monument, it has grown to more than 37,000 panels, adorned with keenly personal memorabilia like dog tags, blue jeans and a brunette wig. It stretches 11 blocks along the Mall, from the Washington Monument to the Capitol. It is so large that visitors were directed to five different subway stations, depending on which panels they wished to see.

And the showing of the quilt was only one of dozens of events here this weekend in which gay-rights groups and AIDS service organizations demonstrated their growing visibility, even as they lamented their virtual absence from the Presidential campaign. Around the capital, they gathered under many banners.

Parents, Families and Friends of Lesbians and Gays was honoring Cher and her daughter, Chastity Bono, at its national convention while several hundred members of the National Latino/Latina Lesbian and Gay Organization gathered to discuss AIDS prevention, among other issues, and prepared to join a large Hispanic march scheduled for today.

The United States Holocaust Memorial Museum celebrated the quick completion of a drive to raise $1.5 million for the study of homosexual victims of Nazism. Across town, Act Up members tried unsuccessfully to enter the Republican Presidential campaign headquarters, chanting, "Dole, Kemp, you can't hide, we charge you with genocide."

Near the White House, the Human Rights Campaign held a rally to mark National Coming Out Day. In a counter-event at the Capitol, the conservative Family Research Council marked National Coming Out of Homosexuality Day and announced the establishment of Parents and Friends of Ex-Gays, to carry the message that "no one has to be gay."

Robert H. Knight, director of cultural studies for the council, described the quilt as "silent and wrenching testimony" but added that it also "symbolizes tragic choices made by many people who were misled into believing they had no other option."

No matter how one regards the quilt, there was no question that it was the focal point of Washington as it was unfolded shortly after sunrise on Friday under cloudless skies. The Names Project Foundation of San Francisco, which created and maintains the quilt, estimated that 750,000 people might see it during the three-day display, which ends on Sunday evening.

There are no plans to show it again in its entirety, said Greg Lugliani, a spokesman for the Names Project, although that has not been ruled out.

Among the first visitors on Friday were Vice President Al Gore and his wife, Tipper, who also joined in the tradition of reading aloud the names of those who have died from AIDS. Between them, they read 71 names. Then they strolled slowly along the fabric walkways crisscrossing the quilt.

Later in the day, President Clinton and his wife, Hillary, visited and viewed the quilt for nearly half an hour in the company of Cleve Jones, founder of the Names Project.

It was the highest-level reception that official Washington has ever offered the quilt.

Their visits caused a brief stir but, for the most part, visitors to the quilt were as quiet as if they were at a shrine. Besides the nonstop intonation of names over loudspeakers, and the occasional caws of crows, there were few sounds louder than sniffing, sobbing and sighs.

The impact of the quilt seemed to come as much from small items as from its large scale. Baseball caps are sewn into many panels, along with berets and yarmulkes. There are denim jackets, leather jackets and sequined jackets and even a two-piece, glen-plaid business suit. Dozens of teddy bears inhabit the quilt, in the company of stuffed rabbits, frogs, giraffes and monkeys. Rainbow flags are much in evidence, symbolizing the gay-rights movement, but there is at least one Cleveland Indian flag, too.

Craig Rowe, the Queens man who died last year, was an artist. He is commemorated by a self-portrait showing him in a crinoline skirt and combat boots. There is also a letter to his sister from the Canadian Government, apologizing for a 1991 incident in which Mr. Rowe was removed from a Montreal-bound train and detained by customs officials who were suspicious because of all the medications he carried.

Mr. Rowe continued his battle with the Canadian immigration office even as he grew debilitated, although he did not live to receive the formal apology. "He held fast to his principles," said his mother, Jean Miller, who came here from Los Angeles.

Mr. Rowe's mother and sister submitted their panel to Names Project volunteers under a tent set up to receive new entries to the quilt. "It's hard for me to give it up," Mrs. Miller said, "but then again, I want everybody to see it and be proud of what he did."

"There was so much he wanted to do and see," she said. "You wait for the phone to ring to hear his voice. You go to the store and see things he'd like that you want to buy. And then you remember, he's not here."

A contingent of two dozen people from Grand Rapids, Mich., waited in line with Mr. Rowe's family to submit six panels. One of them contained the name of Scott Roberts, who died last December at the age of 62. "Up until two years ago, my father had hope, but then it was, 'Forget it,'" said Mr. Roberts's daughter, Michele Isaksen, who came with her partner, Robin Hardy.

Jack Welsh, a 61-year-old hardware and plumbing salesman at Sears, traveled from Tulsa, Okla., for the convention of the parents group. He also came to see the panels honoring his son, Michael, who died in Tampa, Fla., in 1992 at the age of 29. "I never say in terms of his passing that we lost Michael," Mr. Welsh said. "I know where he is."

One quilt bears a lavender rose of moire fabric on a four-foot-long stem. There is a legend — "Michael Scott Welsh, June 15, 1963-Eternity" — and a poem he wrote two months before his death, ending with the exhortation: "It's not too late. I'm still alive. Let's celebrate."

The Jesuit Urban Center and Last Tuesday society announce the death of Joseph Lucy on September 8, 1996. Joe's legacy goes back to the beginning of the Last Tuesday dinner since he was one of the original twelve men who founded the program. His contributions through the years were vital to the success of the Last Tuesday dinner. Through the numerous meals and retreats that Joe attended, he graced the lives of many through energy, love, compassion, and great humor. We have lost a pioneer, but through all of his contributions we have gained great vision to what is right and what is good, and we thank God for his gifts and his life. We entrust his good care to our gracious God and ask you to join us in prayer for his repose and for the comfort of his family

MEMORIAL SERVICE

For

ROBERT LEMIEUX

Old South Church*

Friends and family are invited to a memorial tribute for Robert 'Bob' Lemieux scheduled for Saturday, December 14th at Gordon Chapel, Old South Church in Copley Square. The program will begin at 4 p.m. A long time community resident and AIDS activist, Lemieux unexpectedly died on November 23rd from E-coli toxemia. Bequests in Bob's honor should be sent to AIDS Treatment News, San Francisco, CA. A full obituary will be printed in Bay Windows at a later date. For further details, the Lemieux family can be reached at 237-4605. 96

Vernon J. Lewis 98

Vernon J. Lewis, a longtime resident of the West Fenway, passed away on June 4 at the Palliative Center at the Beth Israel Deaconess Medical Center.

He was the son of the late Vernon J. Lewis Sr. and the late Marguerite (McGovern) Lewis of Taunton. He is survived by his brother, Kenneth E., four nieces, a nephew, two grandnephews, and one grandniece.

Vernon was for several years a mental health assistant for the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. He was very well regarded by his former colleagues for being a dedicated and sympathetic mental health care provider.

His friends regarded him as a compassionate, generous, and understanding person. We will miss him greatly.

A memorial service will be held for Vernon at the Dooley Chapel at the Deaconess West Campus on Wednesday, June 24, at 7:00pm.

KARL LANGE

I met Karl Lange in 1994 on my first day as a volunteer counselor at Paul Newman's Hole in the Wall Gang, a camp in Connecticut for kids with HIV and other serious diseases. He was 12 years old, three weeks out of the hospital after a battle with pneumonia and spending the first night of his life away from his mother, Pat. (By then, Karl was an HIV vet, having contracted the disease from a transfusion as a toddler.) The next evening, he was rushed to the hospital with a fever of 105. Over the phone, he asked me two questions: What did the guys in the bunkhouse say? And would he be able to return to camp to swim?

I didn't speak to Karl again for four years; this was my loss, because I missed seeing him live life during those years the way it is supposed to be lived.

In seventh grade, he got tired of lying to his best friend, and let the local newspaper tell northeastern Pennsylvania he had HIV. An X-Files fanatic, he traveled to fan conventions nationwide. He became a mechanical whiz, fixing all things in the house. He decorated his room with Michael Jordan and Cindy Crawford posters, and begged his parents for an all-terrain vehicle.

But this past May, his blood pressure dropped suddenly. Doctors told Pat Lange they could insert a tube into his lungs to keep him breathing. "That's when I said enough was enough," she said. "Karl and I had talked about what we wanted, and I told them they were not going to cut my little boy." Karl died on May 27. "Now we wish he was around to tell us how all the gadgets in the house work," Pat Lange said. —Matt Futterman
