General Sherman entertains President's Partners

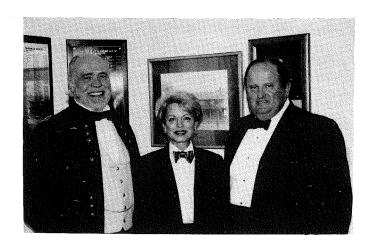

"Gen. William Tecumseh Sherman Returns" was the theme when the Cameron University President's Partners' Gala '96 was held on February 3 at the Fort Sill Officers Club. The event is held annually to show appreciation to the individuals and organizations who contribute $1,000 each year through the Partners' program.

The evening began with a tour of the Fort Sill commanding general's residence, Sherman House, hosted by Carol Rigby, wife of Fort Sill's commanding general, Maj. Gen Randall L. Rigby. The guests then moved to the Fort Sill Officer's Club for dinner and entertainment.

Attired in vintage costumes, General William Tecumseh Sherman, portrayed by re-enactor and historian Dr. Ted Kachel, and his lady friend, Vinnie Reaume, portrayed by Nancy Kachel, were special guests for the evening. When Gen. Sherman visited Fort Sill in 1871, an assassination attempt on Sherman's life was thwarted on the porch of the garrison commander's house. Since that historic event, the official residence of Fort Sill's commanding general has been called Sherman House. Dr. Kachel entertained the guests with a historical monologue of General Sherman's life and times.

Dr. Kachel is a professor of ethics and sociology at Tulsa Junior College. He has made the study of William Tecumseh Sherman a lifetime pursuit.

Entertainment was also provided by the Cameron University Concert Choir under the direction of Dr. Earl Logan.

Cameron University President Don Davis recognized ten new Partners who have joined in the past year bringing the total list of Partners to 170.

The President's Partners was organized in 1989 to raise funds to meet the short and long-term financial needs for quality education at Cameron University. Donors contribute $1,000 annually with the option of designating up to one-half of the contribution to a university program of their choice. An individual or business can become lifetime Partners by donating $10,000 within a ten-year period. Contributions may be used to provide scholarships for outstanding students, endow chairs for exceptional professors, encourage research and its application, improve facilities and assist in recruiting faculty and students.

Further information about the Partners program and a list of the current President's Partners is on Page 2 of this newsletter.

President's Partners support quality education

The President's Partners' program was organized in 1989 by the directors of the Cameron University Foundation, Inc. in response to the urgent need for Cameron University to meet short and long range financial commitments for quality education. The funds are used to advance the academic goals of Cameron University. Partners contribute at least $1,000 annually to Cameron. Lifetime Partners have contributed $10,000 within a ten-year period. Donors may designate up to one half of their contribution for any purpose within the scope of the Foundation.

Contributions are tax deductible and will be utilized under the guidelines of the Cameron University Foundation, İnc., a qualified 501(c)(3) charitable institution.

Anyone interested in becoming a President's Partner may contact the Cameron Development Office, 2800 W. Gore Blvd., Lawton, OK 73505; phone: (405)581-2999. Checks should be made payable to Cameron University Foundation, Inc.

The individuals, businesses and organizations listed below have become President's Partners since 1989. Denotes Lifetime Partner. Names are listed in the order in which they became contributors to President's Partners.

Endowment funds environmental forums

Organic Gardening, Fact and Fiction was the first topic in a planned sequence of environmental forums sponsored by the agriculture department's Joseph H. Mullen Endowed Chair. Dr. A. C. Bennett, chairman of the agriculture department, was discussion leader for the forum held at Cameron on February 5.

The Joseph H. Mullen Endowed Chair was endowed in the will of the late Joyce Elizabeth Hansen in honor of her father, who practiced dentistry in Lawton for 51 years. Mrs. Hansen had a special interest in organic foods.

A producer-oriented conference held on February 15 was cosponsored by the Mullen endowed chair. The forum held on March 22 featured Mark Griffith, 1991 Cameron graduate, discussing simple modeling of organic molecules in soil. He is a Ph.D. candidate at Texas Tech University and the topic was based on his thesis research in environmental soil science.

Future activities include exploration of environmental topics in forum format, conducting educational conferences and seminars for agricultural producers, and collection of information related to agriculture and the environment for dissemination to interested persons.

Cameron returns to Lone Star Conference

The Lone Star Conference has announced the return of Cameron University as an associate member of that league in a newly formed North Division. Cameron was a LSC member from 1988-1993.

"We are delighted to be returning to the Lone Star Conference," CU President Don Davis said. "We enjoyed our earlier competition and association and are excited about the expanded conference. It will be a major force in NCAA Division II and we are pleased to be a part of it."

In addition to Cameron, the Lone Star Conference announced the addition of two other Oklahoma institutions in November, Northeastern Oklahoma State University and Southeastern Oklahoma State University.

The new institutions will begin individual sports competition in 1996-97 with team competition to begin in 1997-98. The LSC will compete in two divisions - North and South. LSC Commissioner Fred Jacoby confirmed that the objective of the conference is to form a North Division consisting of eight universities from Arkansas and Oklahoma with additional members to be added in the future. The South Division will be composed of the member schools in New Mexico and Texas. With the recent additions, the LSC becomes one of the largest and strongest conferences in NCAA Division II.

CU President Don Davis had announced last spring that Cameron would be joining the Oklahoma Intercollegiate Conference. Since that time Northeastern and Southeastern resigned from OIC, prompting Cameron to seek LSC status.

McClung receives journalism honor

Paul McClung, who was Cameron University's director of information services from 1990 to early 1995, has been selected for induction into the Oklahoma Journalism Hall of Fame. McClung will be inducted, along with eight other state journalists, at a ceremony on April 26 at the University of Central Oklahoma campus in Edmond.

McClung's career was launched when he won a first place award from Weekly Reader in the sixth grade. He edited his high school newspaper in Pueblo, Colo., and was editor of the Oklahoma Daily, the OU student newspaper. He received his bachelor's degree from OU in 1949. He then worked for The Lawton Constitution and The Lawton Morning Press as a reporter in 1949 and 1950 before entering Columbia University where he earned a master's degree in journalism.

He worked as a freelance magazine journalist before returning to Lawton in 1963 to work with The Lawton Constitution as a reporter and columnist. He was named managing editor in 1981 and executive editor in 1983 before retiring in 1987.

McClung is well known for his approximately 2,000 "Old Dad" newspaper columns. He is also author of a book, "Papa Jack," published by the University of Oklahoma Press. His many journalism awards include three Warren Shear state prizes for enterprise and investigative reporting.

Collegian wins First Class rating

Cameron University's weekly school newspaper, The Cameron Collegian, won a First Class honor rating from the Associated Collegiate Press at the University of Minnesota, Minneapolis.

A total of 3,000 points in several news categories was necessary to receive the rating, and the newspaper was awarded 3,280 points. The Collegian also received two Marks of Distinction for campus leadership and for layout and design.

In commending the newspaper's leadership, judges praised the newspaper for "providing the Cameron community with a lively, interesting, balanced forum for the exchange of ideas." Judges said the newspaper's "clean, organized modular design is attractive."

The newspaper was also praised for its "good work in offering variety and balanced presentation in news coverage, particularly good coverage of arts-related issues, and good variety of people-oriented feature stories."

April Burcham was editor during the spring 1994-95 semester when the newspaper was judged. Danni Bryant was news editor, and Susan Aitson was opinion editor. Dr. Donna Evers is the Collegian faculty adviser.

Cameron survives challenges of early years by Sally Soelle, History & Humanities, Cameron University Editor's note: This is the third in a series of articles covering the history of Cameron.

Supporters of Cameron State School of Agriculture who believed the first five years of Cameron's history were difficult, were in for an even greater struggle in the late teens and early twenties when its will to survive was sorely tested in the state legislature. Although the school showed steady growth during its first two decades, a succession of presidents dealt with legislative attempts to abolish the school outright or to force its demise through a lack of appropriations.

Farm families who advocated a farming education for their children must have been frustrated at the lack of support in light of consistent growth. Beginning in 1913, students from outside Comanche County attended Cameron, and in succeeding years, they came from surrounding states as well. Enrollment rose each year despite a lack of adequate campus housing. Even World War I did not substantially reduce the growth which characterized this period. By 1927, Cameron was second only to the college at Tonkawa in enrollments among junior colleges.

Moreover, school officials measured growth in other ways. To the extent that appropriations allowed, the campus grew in terms of physical facilities, and the experimental farm flourished. Students planted trees, grape vines, flowers, and vegetables which enhanced the campus and expanded opportunities in agricultural The very successful management. Cameron dairy exported its products as far away as Chicago. The course of study expanded from three to four years and administrators added new courses to the curriculum. A 1915 advertisement for the school described coursework in agriculture, domestic science, dairying, manual training and music. Funding from state and federal sources in 1919 made possible the establishment of an irrigation experiment station on campus.

The campus community had matured in other ways as well. Student organizations added a social dimension to the academic experience. Cameron faculty organized a band, orchestra and glee club; orators found challenges in a drama club and debating team; and various other social organizations emerged. Athletic teams established earlier were popular if not entirely successful, and Cameron joined the Oklahoma Collegiate Junior College Conference when it won junior college status. With maturity as an institution, Cameron faculty and students recorded their evolution in a school newspaper, an annual, and a monthly news and agricultural paper.

Despite this sense of confidence and maturity as an institution, Cameron continued to face funding crises, particularly in the area of new construction. Lack of dormitory space remained a serious problem. By 1915 the school had rented several houses near campus to accommodate students who could not be housed in dormitories. In the fall of 1919 Cameron turned away students for lack of space, having set up beds in the barn loft and every other building available. In a show of local support, Lawton bankers came forward in 1920 to offer funds to aid in the construction of additional housing.

While the school turned away students, the state legislature remained generally nonsupportive. As late as 1915 there were factions at the capitol pressing to abolish the agricultural schools. There was even some talk of converting Cameron into an orphanage to serve the western part of Oklahoma. The struggle to secure funding continued into the twenties. Conditions reached a desperate level in 1921 when the house adjourned without an appropriations measure and Cameron officials contemplated ending the semester early.

Campus facilities were in grave disrepair by this time. The main building, girls' and boys' dorms, the teachers' cottage, barns and machinery shed badly needed renovation. There was no president's house, no library and little instructional equipment. By 1923 the condition of buildings was so bad that local representatives insisted that state officials investigate. Still, subsequent appropriation measures failed to get out of committee, were defeated in the house or senate, or were vetoed by the governor. Such were the frustrations for several Cameron presidents and the Lawton citizenry who had been loyal, enthusiastic advocates of the school since its inception.

Cameron's very survival was at stake, as regional politicians, organizations such as the Chamber of Commerce, and Cameron officials were pitted against lobbyists for other interests in the legislature. Professor A.C. Farley was one of few presidents who remained in office for more than a short period during this tumultuous time. He was 42 years old, a graduate of the University of Missouri and had 20 years of experience in education. A staunch supporter of agricultural education and firmly committed to the concept of the superiority of rural life over urban, he embraced the campus housing issue and sought various remedies for the apparent lack of interest legislators had for the rural schools. Farley and his successor A.E. Wickizer, a former superintendent of schools in Amber, Okla., were energetic, vocal advocates for Cameron as it sought possible avenues for survival. In an address to the Chamber of Commerce in 1920, Wickizer declared that Cameron had been "little long enough" and that as an institution which should be educating the children of half a million residents of the region it deserved appropriate funding. He traveled widely, pressing for specific improvements including electric lighting and paved roads. Regional legislators W.D. McBee, L.F. Goodrich, Andrew Rhyndwand, and Jed Johnson carried on the battle in Oklahoma City. Jed Johnson, a long time supporter of Cameron, introduced legislation in 1927 to give Cameron junior college status. Although its financial challenges did not end, this elevation brought long-sought respect and additional monies.

Members of the Chamber of Commerce also played a pivotal role in keeping the school alive amidst attempts to force it into submission. Lawton businessmen who had cooperated to establish the school years earlier, now rallied to provide funding for repairs and renovations and pressed the legislature to consider requests for appropriations. They sent representatives to legislative sessions, openly supported bills which provided desperately-needed construction monies, and at times solicited labor and materials to build structures themselves.

Throughout these years of struggle, Southwest Oklahoma remained a rural, agricultural region. Indeed it would remain so for years to come. Farming families supported Cameron's commitment to agricultural education, asserting that farm children deserved the same opportunities as those attending urban schools. Ironically, at the very time that farm families and school officials espoused the superiority of farm life over urban living, the nearby city of Lawton was growing and changing, embracing the industrial and technological innovations of the period. As it did so, the school west of Lawton responded to its needs with new goals. courses of study, facilities and administration. The legislation which had provided for Cameron's elevation to a junior college was the first step along a road to a future which the class of 1927 could not have imagined.

This class photo taken in front of King Hall of a graduating class is thought to be from the 1920's. If you can identify the class year and any of the students, please contact the CU alumni office or the author, Dr. Sally Soelle of the CU history department.

If alumni received more than one degree from Cameron, they are listed under the year of their most recent degree. Those who attended but did not graduate are listed under the last year they were at Cameron; or in some cases, the class year when they would have graduated.

Icebox training

Hughes endures cold-weather training school in Alaska

By Danni Bryant

While some Cameron students spent last summer lying on beaches or swimming in pools, one Cameron student spent part of last summer camping out on a glacier in Alaska.

Shelley Hughes, a senior chemistry major from Norman, is a ROTC scholarship student who was chosen to attend Northern Warfare Training at Fort Greely, Alaska.

Students attending the school, which is located 120 miles southwest of Fairbanks near a little town called Delta Junction, are given instruction in mountaineering techniques.

"During the first week we were trained in boulder climbing, top roping and rope bridges," Hughes said. "The second week we had to summit Gunny Sack Mountain using all the mountaineering techniques we had learned. The third week we stayed three days on a glacier. We learned how to travel and maneuver on a glacier."

Hughes said the cadets were taught how to use mountaineering equipment such as cramptons, which fit onto boots to enable one to walk on ice.

Hughes was one of only two female cadets out of the 60 cadets attending the school.

The other female cadet, who was from California, was an experienced mountain climber, and her skill level was high.

"She beat all the guys in top roping," Hughes said.

The training camp is in a rugged, isolated area with a lot of rivers, mountains and wildlife, including bears, Hughes said.

"We were told to stay in the camp because they said if we disappeared they'd never find us," she said.

Upon arrival, the cadets were told there was a "grizzly bear risk" in the area.

"We were told that one cadet had died from a grizzly bear attack," she said. "Two or three cadets had died from falling in the river, and two or three others had died from falls. Because of the danger we were not allowed to leave the camp on our own."

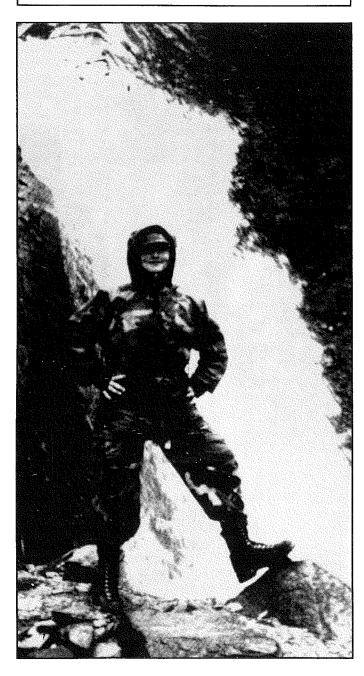

Though the area is dangerous, it is also beautiful, she said.

"It was gorgeous there," she said. "It was in the warmest months, so the temperature stayed from 60 to 80 degrees during the day, but it got really cold at night. It freezes every night on the glacier."

During training, the cadets were evaluated on top roping, rope tying, setting up anchors and doing the Donnelly Dome Climb in 68 minutes.

Upon graduation, Hughes hopes to enter the Army as a second lieutenant. She would like to be assigned to the Medical Service Corps and plans to attend pharmacy school.

Spring sports looking for national titles

Three of Cameron's spring sports have realistic hopes of competing for a national championship. The women's and men's tennis teams, along with the golf team, enter the spring season ranked regionally and nationally.

Women's tennis coach Joe Jones returns five players from 1995's national tournament participant team. The Lady Aggies enter the spring ranked No. 4 in the region behind Abilene Christian, Northern Colorado and the University of Denver, after an undefeated fall season where they won four matches and had a strong showing in the Rolex Tournament. The doubles team of May Lee/Erica Consen were one victory away from the fall national tournament, when they were defeated in the finals of the Rolex regional.

The lineup Jones used during the fall season was May Lee, Erica Consen, Janice Vasquez, Kimbre Townsen, Tammy Nichols and Ericca Stephens. The spring season should only be better when Baylor transfer Ellen Martin, who will be playing in one of the top three positions, becomes eligible.

"The women are looking to get even better," Coach Joe Jones said. "We are not satisfied with the status quo. Everyone is concerned about progress."

Cameron will feature a strong spring schedule playing Abilene Christian and Northern Colorado, as well as NCAA Division I foe Stephen F. Austin. Three OIC conference teams are included on the home portion of the schedule, which includes the four-team, March 22-23, Cameron Invitational.

The Men's Tennis team finished a solid fall season and enters the spring season ranked fourth in the region. The team competed in the ITA Rolex Tennis Championships and the Abilene Christian Tournament, gaining the necessary experience it needs to carry over to the spring season.

"We got to play a lot of matches under pressure. That's what I wanted," Coach James Helvey said.

Senior Jason White, the No. 2 seed at the Rolex tournament, will play No. 1 for the Aggies this spring, followed closely by Derk DeVries at the No. 2 position. The team also includes Shawn Foster, Todd Chapman, Clint Cash, Grant Babbitt, and Tommy Hubert. Chapman advanced to the quarter-finals in the Rolex, and the doubles team of White/DeVries advanced to the semi-finals before bowing out.

Cameron's spring schedule features nine matches at home and seven against regionally ranked competition. The Aggies opened the home portion of their schedule Feb. 27 against Oklahoma Christian.

Helvey's group is not the only men's program gaining regional and national attention. The Cameron golf team, under coach Jerry Hrnciar, enters the spring season ranked 17th in the nation in NCAA Division II.

The Aggies have three top 5 finishes in five tournaments under their belts from the fall season, and are looking for better things from the spring season. Cameron finished third in the Oklahoma Intercollegiate Golf Tournament played at the Lawton Country Club in late October. Junior Jeffrey Van Horn finished third out of 67 players in the tournament, but the highlight of the tournament was senior Chad Willis' hole in one in the final round of the tournament.

Cameron also recorded fifth place finishes in the All College Classic and the Texas Intercollegiate. Individually, freshman Jason Jeter led the Aggies with four top 10 finishes in four tournaments.

"We are close to becoming the type of team I know we can be," Coach Jerry Hrnciar said. "We have a good team when we are all playing to our potential. We are working to be in the top five in the nation."

Cameron will play a strong spring schedule, travelling to Texas twice, Kentucky, and two tournaments in Oklahoma before NCAA Regional play in early May.

ATHLETIC DEPARTMENT NAMES FALL SEMESTER HONOR ROLL

The Cameron athletic department has announced 55 students have been named to the 1995 fall semester honor roll. To be named to the honor roll, student-athletes must maintain a 3.00 grade point average during the semester.

Women's tennis lead the way with a team cumulative grade point average of 3.21. Seven of the nine sports, including the athletic training staff, registered team GPA's of higher than 2.75.

The 55 student-athletes named to the honor roll this semester was five more than the 50 named to the honor roll during the spring semester of 1995.

SECOND ANNUAL FUNSHOOT SET FOR MAY

The second annual Cameron Athletic Department Spring Funshoot is set for May 2 at the Comanche Skeet and Trap Club. Plans are under way to make the second Funshoot more fun and entertaining than the first.

More than 60 people took part in last year's fundraising activities which included a trap shoot, horseshoes competition, and a barbecue dinner. The fun afternoon grossed in excess of $8,000, which went entirely to the Cameron athletic department.

Dan Skarli took home first place honors in the trap shoot competition with Penn Rabb coming in second place and Scott Briggs bringing home the third place trophy.

Plans are under way to include a beginners range with lessons from certified range personnel. The popular horseshoes event will be held again this year.

Be sure to mark May 2 on your calendar for the second annual Cameron Athletic Department Spring Funshoot.

J.P. Richard, Presidents' Partner, and former chairman of the Cameron University Foundation, Inc. participates in the 1995 Fun Shoot.
