Applications are up 14.8%

Applications for admission at Wagner College are up 14.8% for the fall 1975 semester, according to figures released in mid-February by the admissions office. The most important jump is in the full-time freshman category, where applications are currently ahead by 114 over the same period last year. The sharp upward trend follows several years of declining or stable enrollment that have troubled Wagner and most other four-year colleges and universities in the country.

Henry H. Heil, Wagner's Dean of Admissions, attributes the dramatic increase largely to a brighter financial aid outlook for many cost-conscious student consumers. "One of the greatest influences this year is the New York State Tuition Assistance Program, which has definitely made Wagner competitive with the less expensive State-supported institutions."

Less fuel, more dollars

In recent months several Wagner College publications have stressed the urgency of dollar-watching during an unstable economic period. And here's a quick update for those who wonder where all the money goes.

The business office estimates that up until last year, when America's energy crisis became a "real" issue for all consumers (and especially those who, like Wagner, exist on a relatively fixed income), Wagner was using about 545,000 gallons of heating oil at a cost of about $82,000. In the past year the College has drastically reduced its consumption, largely by lowering campus thermostats to 68°. The new figures: 400,000 gallons (a reduction of 145,000 gallons) at a cost of $144,000 ($62,000 more).

40th summer session

Wagner's fortieth summer session will begin on Wednesday, May 21st, three days after Commencement. 1975 will be the second year in which the summer sessions will be conducted during a twelve-week period ending in mid-August. Our summer offerings will again be composed of a series of two, three and four week sessions.

Students who avail themselves of the 1975 summer courses can gain a full semester's credit (15 credits). The general tuition cost for 12-15 credits this summer will be $980. A number of courses for teachers will be offered in the evenings beginning July 7, and within a flexible schedule.

Special two-week courses will focus on Law and Society, Urban Minorities and Biology field courses. New courses will be offered in Oceanography, Exploring Symphony in New York, The Psychology of Later Life, Spanish for Teachers, The New York City Writer's Conference, Workshops in Instrumental Repair and European Studies in Spain and Morocco.

Courses in business have been scheduled in evening sequences during the summer so that nine credits toward the 30 credits required for an M.B.A. degree can be completed between May 21 and August 15.

Many departments have scheduled courses emphasizing the heritage and horizon aspects of our Bicentennial celebrations. A few of the Bicentennial courses include: American Art, The Continuing American Revolution, Colonial Religions on Staten Island, The Philosophy of the Founding Fathers and America "200" Looking Forward.

Inquiries about the summer may be directed to Dr. William A. Rowen '50 at the college.

Board Chairman Robert E. Schellberg

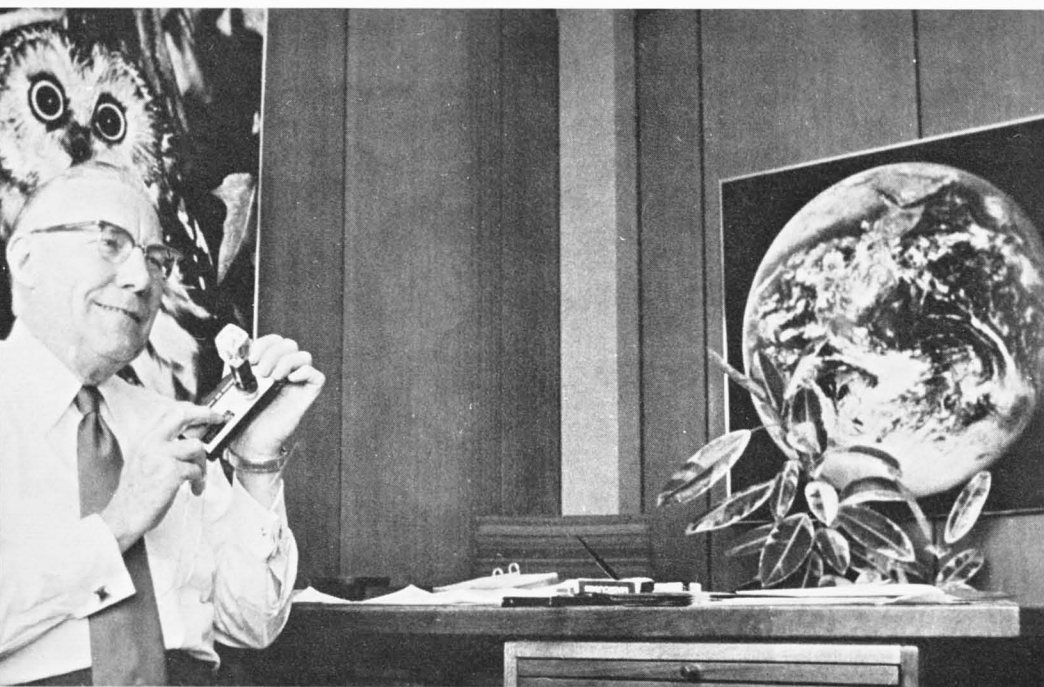

By Katrina Johnson

Every spring more than 500 graduates of Wagner College climb the steps of the podium to pick up their degrees, shake hands with President Davidson and before climbing down the stairs on the other side they shake hands with another person.

"Who's the guy on the end?" asks one soon-to-be alum to another — "I don't know — some trustee or something". Another decides the matter, "He's the chairman of the board."

Robert E. Schellberg is not only the chairman of the board of trustees for Wagner College, he is also vice president and general manager of the distribution division of the 23rd largest corporation in the U.S. He handles 3.5 billion dollars worth of Kodak business a year; oversees the operation of 77 facilities and 3082 employees. The figures are staggering, as are his responsibilities.

Robert Schellberg's Kodak 60 Instamatic, on a chain, is always ready to take photographs. For some shots he still uses the venerable Speed Graphic, however.

His membership in church and civic organizations and his many honors make quite an impressive list. I would rather tell you about other impressions I came away with after meeting with him in his home.

Schellberg's talent for organization is reflected in his home. Each hobby has its niche. A wall in the den is given over to magazine racks that hold more than 30 current subscriptions. There is a tropical plant case that holds a high and humid temperature for the many orchids, poinsettias and christmas cacti. The banana tree in the garage won't fit in the case.

Gardening tools line the walls of the garage and the well-trimmed yard affirms their constant use. Carpentry tools are found in the basement. Schellberg made an altar for the Good Shepherd Lutheran Church, built a garage, put a roof on the house, made bedroom furniture, a bed for Hans (the dog) and all the cupboards in the basement.

And that's a lot of cupboards; after all where do you put a collection of glasses from colleges and universities across the country; or over 90 Carousel (that's Kodak) trays of slides?

The walls in the cellar are decorated with a restaurant match book collection (over 500) and a famous people picture wall showing the times Schellberg has caught people like Roger Staubach with his Kodak Pocket 60 that is part of his daily dress.

The wine cellar contains 225 bottles of french red and white wines — mostly Burgundy and Bordeaux.

There are model railroad cars in one room, moose and caribou horns in the garage (along with two Thunderbird cars), canoeing gear in the cellar and a grand piano in the bedroom.

Schellberg has filled his home with hobbies and adventures that have given him and his family much joy and wisdom. His life is full and fascinating and he will share it with you for the asking. The question we had for the chairman of the board was, when do you find time to sleep? "I sleep on airplanes."

John M. Braisted

John M. Braisted has been a member of the Board since 1960 and is a member of the executive and finance, faculty, honorary degree and constitution & by-laws committee and is chairman of the nominating committee. He received the Distinguished Citizens Award of Wagner College in 1951.

Braisted lives on Staten Island, is married and has two children. He has been District Attorney for Richmond County since 1956, having graduated from Columbia College and Brooklyn Law School as well as receiving an honorary degree from Wagner College.

In addition to his Wagner position, Braisted is a trustee of Staten Island Hospital and Staten Island Zoological Society. Davidson has earned degrees from Luther College and the University of Minnesota, an earned doctorate from Harvard University and an honorary doctorate from Hartwick College.

Editors Note:

We realized, many months ago, that the Wagner publics knew very little about the body charged with guiding the direction of Wagner College — the members of the Board of Trustees.

The biographies preceding this statement are the modest results of a good deal of checking and research, plus a pleasant visit with Chairman Schellberg in Rochester, N. Y.

Seahawk sports

Ice Hockey

After only three full seasons of play the Wagner College Ice Hockey Club has developed into a very competitive team. The team plays in two separate leagues, The Bi-State Hockey League and the Metropolitan Ice Hockey Conference; this means a total of 41 regular season games and including play-offs, a total of about 50 games. Wagner plays more games than most major college ice hockey teams in the country.

The success of the Hockey Club centers around the efforts of four persons. Professor William Horn referred to as the "Father of Wagner Hockey" is the faculty advisor of the club. He organizes the ice time and the schedule. The head coach, Frederick Newberg, '65M'72, took over as head coach half-way through last season and the team finished with a winning record. Coach Newberg is assisted by William Yozaites '73 a former left-wing on the first year team and Paul DiPietro '74, a former goal-tender for Wagner. "I am fortunate to have such able assistants as Paul and Will," Coach Newberg said after a recent Seahawk victory.

Two-thirds of the players are freshmen and sophomores. At the time of this writing Wagner leads its division in the Bi-State Hockey League and has an excellent chance to win the championship.

Team members pay for their own insurance and equipment. The players, their families and friends are the main "financial and spiritual boosters."

Men's Basketball

It looked like the start of something big. One of the tallest Seahawk teams in recent memory (one man 6-8, two 6-6, two 6-5, and six more between 6-4 and 6-0 on the 13-man squad) ran up three straight victories against Lehigh, CCNY and Wilkes — and seemed headed for an impressive early-season performance. But then came six close ones, all of which went against the young Wagner club.

With the record standing 3-6, Coach John Goodwin's cagers broke the losing streak against Adelphi in a consolation round of the Sacred Heart Tournament, playing the kind of team ball that accounted for the winning streak at the start of the 74-75 campaign. The team stands 7-9 as we go to press the end of January.

Consistency has been missing in the Wagner efforts thus far; but consistency should come with experience, and for this reason the remaining 14 games — 8 of them in Sutter Gym — may find the Hawks riding high. Coach Goodwin has no seniors on the club and only four juniors: and as he moves toward the close of his third season on Grymes Hill, he'll be looking ahead to what may become one of the most exciting periods in Wagner basketball history.

Women's Basketball

Winning has become a habit for Coach Pat Bramwell's squad. Undefeated in regular season play last year, the team roared past its first four opponents of the 74-75 season — St. Francis, LIU, Hofstra, and Malloy — before leaving campus for the mid-semester break. The Wagner women are back at it now, and if they continue their winning ways, a date with the New York State Tournament in late February.

Coach Bramwell relies heavily on team play and attributes the brilliant string of regular season victories to unselfishness. The 74-75 club boasts considerable experience — including high scorer Gela Mazella and top rebounders Rose Taylor and Sue Blomquist — and has the potential to end up in this year's Eastern Regional Tournament early in March.

Wrestling

Bill Lied's pre-season call was for one of the best teams in Seahawk history. And when Andy Frick recovers from mononucleosis (Andy won every match last year, including the Met Championship at 158-lbs.), and Desi Baker gets off his crutches (Desi was undefeated in regular season last year and finished third in the Met tourney), and talented Rod Rupp comes back from a broken foot, the season will turn bright again. So it goes.

The Hawk wrestlers stand 2-4 at press time, but the bulk of the matches are yet to come: six regular season contests, including one dual meet and one triangular meet, followed by the Met Championships. Wagner won the Met's Most Improved Team trophy last year, and the championship has always been a prosperous event in the Wagner wrestling season. This year should be no exception.

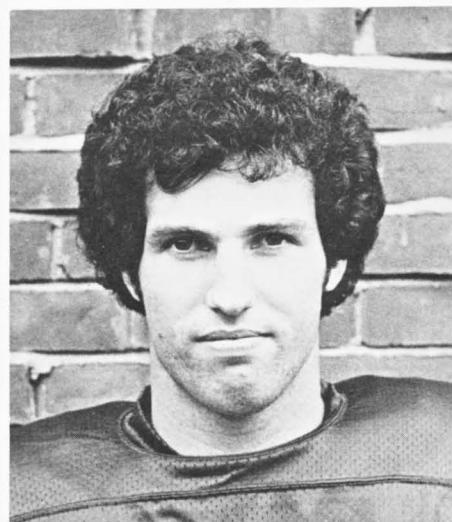

Parisi is All-American

Tony Parisi, the most brilliant defensive back in Wagner history, has been named to the Associated Press Second Team Little All-American squad has been picked for the All-Lutheran team and was chosen the Met Conference Outstanding Defensive Player of the Year. A senior from Staten Island, he leaves Wagner football with a firm hold on more than half a dozen Seahawk records, and his graduation will mark the end of what some Wagner football buffs have come to know as "the Parisi Era."

He entered the '74 season already owning the career interception mark of 16 and added eight more this year averaging an impressive 27.5 yards per return. Perhaps his greatest contribution on defense, though, was his mere presence on the field. The reason he intercepted only eight passes this year is that opposing quarterbacks learned early in the going that passes thrown in his direction just didn't make good sense.

But defense wasn't his only contribution to this year's 5-3-1 club that closed the season with a 41-7 drubbing of Hofstra. "He is not only an outstanding safety," explains head coach Bob Hicks, "but he is also the finest punt and kick return man we've ever had. He's simply given us a dimension we've never had before." He averaged 24 yards on kickoff returns, 11.5 on punts, and posed a major offensive threat every time he touched the ball. He had one of his finest days of the season against Springfield, when he ran back a 45-yard interception for a TD and later added a 67-yard punt return score to help power the Hawks to a 34-7 win. His finest kickoff return of the year came against Hofstra in the season finale, when he broke the game open with a 78-yard TD scamper at the start of the second half.

His name will appear in the record book seven times after this year: most yards interceptions (season), kick return yardage (season), punt return yardage (season), interceptions (career), most yards interceptions (career), kickoff return yardage (career), and punt return yardage (career).

"He's one of the finest ball players we've ever had at Wagner," said Hicks, who has seen little All-American, All-Conference, All-East, and All-Lutheran players come and go during his tenure as the Seahawks head coach. "We're going to miss him."

News on Grymes Hill

“Operation Access” offers college education with discount for some

Wagner College has launched a major non-traditional education program that, according to President Davidson will open the Grymes Hill campus to more students than ever before. Labeled “Operation Access,” the program calls for the immediate establishment of a “Saturday college,” a 50% tuition reduction for persons aged 60 and over, and a 25% tuition discount for married couples who study together at Wagner. “The focus of the program,” says Dr. Davidson, “is the person who has discontinued his or her college education or who for any number of reasons postponed going to college. There are currently too few educational options for many of these people on Staten Island, and I believe that Wagner can fulfill many of the needs of the community’s residents through the program we’ve established.”

Beginning with this spring semester, students are able to choose from nine Saturday courses — ceramics, Asian religions, astronomy, North American Indians, and an introduction to learning disabilities — carry academic credit while the remaining four, including Italian and Spanish language programs, are available as part of Wagner’s non-credit continuing education program. According to Egon O. Wendel, academic dean, while the program has begun modestly, it marks a significant breakthrough for the many people who have forgotten about college because it simply isn’t accessible enough.

“We’ve always offered evening courses, but we go into the Saturday college after offering only one credit course on the weekend. Having the Saturday program, which we plan to expand quite a bit by next fall, will vastly accelerate the process through which a part-time student can earn a degree.”

J.J. Boies, director of continuing education and graduate studies, believes that “Operation Access” holds a great deal of promise even beyond the steps that have been already taken, and he looks forward to future innovations that could help a lot of people decide college is for them. “One of my strongest feelings in this area is for the granting of life-experience credits. What limits we set on the granting of such credits remains to be seen, since we are simply in the discussion stages right now. But I believe the concept of accepting a person’s life experience as an acceptable substitute for some classroom work is a sound one.”

Another facet of “Operation Access” that intrigues Dr. Boies is “credit by examination.” Students can already earn up to 18 college credits by taking formal examinations in certain subject areas. If this kind of program is expanded, he adds, a great many qualified people could begin their college careers with a substantial number of credit hours behind them. “I’ve always been a stickler for standards,” he admits, “and I’m not suggesting that we fill our classrooms with people who really aren’t prepared for college. But there are many people, some of them quite brilliant, who need only to be brought up to date in order to function superbly in an academic setting. The theme of the entire program is access: giving more people than ever before a chance to develop in the college environment. Whatever we do to make a college career available to qualified students will certainly benefit both the community and the campus.”

Tour to Spain, Morocco

Encouraged by the success of previous European summer study tours, Wagner is again offering an opportunity for travel and learning abroad in July. The 15-day tour, starting July 7, will deal with the Moorish culture of Spain and Morocco. The itinerary, in this colorful and exotic part of the world, includes Madrid, Granada, Seville, Costa del Sol, Tangier, Casablanca and Fez.

The group will have its own bus and English-speaking guide and Dr. Walter Kaelber of the Wagner faculty will again accompany the group as academic director.

There will be local guides throughout and participants may receive three hours of credit at no extra cost.

All transportation, accommodations with private bath or shower and two meals per day are included. Your inquiries should be addressed to Dr. William A. Rowen '50 at Wagner College. You may also phone 212/390-3270 for more information.

More than 5000 persons attended the Homecoming celebration on Grymes Hill this fall and, though the football team lost to Kings Point 17 to 7, the still-festive atmosphere was symbolized by a jaunty Wagner fan, President Arthur O. Davidson.

Homecoming '74

This Alpha Delta Pi effort was one of many inventive floats. Kappa Sigma Alpha took first prize in the fraternity division, Alpha Omicron Pi in the sororities and the Spanish Club in the independent grouping.

A yen to be a teacher

I went back to school last September, as a teacher not as a student.

Or maybe I went back as a student in the guise of a teacher.

All of us have our daydreams (trying to get away from the nightmares) and our yens. My daydreams I keep to myself, but I've always had a yen to be a teacher.

So when a university invited me last spring to teach a seminar in the fall, I shot back a letter of acceptance before anyone had a chance to change their mind. I brashly brushed aside suggestions from friends that four hours of teaching on top of my normal schedule might be a little much. Not for this pigeon who looked forward to the eager, young, open minds waiting to be educated. It was gung-ho, hoist anchor and all that.

Two months swept by with amazing speed. I was half way to the first day of class. The weather was warm and the sun bright. Vacation plans danced before my eyes. A member of my family gently suggested that I might be doing some research. Like, man, "You dummy, your first class is only two months away and you haven't done anything yet. What do you think teaching is?"

A challenge is a challenge. A mere two hours at my desk and I had blocked out thirty-two two-hour units, with four or five as spares should there have to be midstream adjustments. Since I deal with the subject every day — press and the government — there were no real problems. I went over the list carefully. Easy. What's all this stuff and nonsense about teacher preparation?

Sure, you know that panic set in on the first of September, two weeks before the first class. Where did I put those Supreme Court decisions involving the First Amendment? Why hasn't that copy of the Freedom of Information Act arrived? What was the name and date of that Florida case? Is my file complete on the Family Court and youthful offender laws? Where did I file that survey on New England newspapers? That book by E.J. Leibling doesn't include all the information I wanted after all.

Teachers by profession may get a vindictive chuckle out of all this. They must know that all these years I have considered their careers one of semi-retirement by contrast.

It all came out in the end and, thank goodness, the end — as well as the beginning and the middle — was pleasant. Once I learned that I had to do my homework.

Come to think of it, doing my homework always was a problem. At least settling down to it was a problem. There always seemed to be a much more interesting activity.

Maybe that's why I slid into becoming a newsman. Wake up more or less and report to work. There's no chance for preparation. The subject's always different. The problems vary by the hour. One can't block off time and points of concentration. The game plan shifts. The semester has no beginning and end, no exams and no special papers. But at least I've had my fling at another "career."

Natale Colosi seminar room is dedicated “Exploring Opera in New York”

More than 200 persons attended the ceremony that dedicated the Natale Colosi Seminar Room and to honor Dr. Colosi for his long service to the college, the community and international medical education.

The seminar room, located on the third floor of the Wagner Science Hall, houses a small science library and serves as a conference room for activities of the department of bacteriology and health sciences. It is named in honor of Dr. Natale Colosi, professor emeritus of bacteriology at Wagner.

Known to Staten Islanders for his pioneering work in air and water pollution abatement and recognized internationally for his contributions to both science and education, Dr. Colosi earned his Ph. D. from N.Y.U. in 1935. While serving on the Wagner faculty from 1935 to 1972, he was commissioner of the Interstate Sanitation Commission, a member of the New York State Hospital Review and Planning Council, and director of the Italian Hospital of New York.

One of the highlights of the ceremony was the announcement of four Natale Colosi graduate fellowships. Dr. Albert Schrager, director of the Italo-American Medical Education Foundation, said that his organization has established four fellowships to be offered each year to graduates of health science programs in Italy. The four recipients, who will vie for the awards in national competition, will attend Wagner College to work for a master's degree in a health field. The fellowships will cover all tuition and board costs for one year, and will be given in honor of the man who, according to Dr. Schrager, “practically single-handedly has created and given direction to a major international exchange program in medical education.”

“... a course which I truly enjoyed was “Exploring Opera in New York.” The contents of the course and the manner in which it was conducted resulted in a highly rewarding experience ... I do not hesitate to recommend this fine course, not only to opera lovers and musicians, but to all who seek information and culture ...”
“... I have been an opera lover for many years and your course opened both my eyes and ears to the many facets of opera.”

This is a sampling of the enthusiastic response which has attested to the popularity of Music 105: “Exploring Opera in New York.” A three credit course, offered by the music department, Music 105 has heightened the musical tastes of graduate, undergraduate and nonmatriculated students since summer, 1973.

Directed by Ms. Margery Mayer, a leading contralto who has sung more than 30 roles with the New York City Opera, the Chicago Opera and the San Carlo Opera, the course covers virtually every aspect of the art form from creation to production.

Students in this spring's Music 105 will take in four operas — Boris Gudonov, La Forza Del Destino, Tosca and La Boheme — as well as an opera rehearsal and backstage tour. The on-campus schedule calls for a series of guest lecturers to include conductor Robert Lawrence, Mrs. John DeWitt Peltz of the Metropolitan Opera Guild, tenor Andrea Velis, baritone Gene Boucher, stage director Bodo Igesh of the Metropolitan Opera Company and George Schick, president of the Manhattan School of Music.

In past semesters, students have been treated to opera as it is presented by New York's Metropolitan Opera Company, with such noted performers as Joan Sutherland in The Tales of Hoffman, Birgit Nilsson in Der Rosenkavalier, and Nicolai Gedda in I Vespri Siciliani, to name but a few.

Although it may be said that the star attraction is the opera itself, the actual classroom experience serves as an important guide to real enjoyment of the art form.

Addy is a Fellow in Royal Institute

J. Keith Addy, professor of chemistry at Wagner, has been elected to Fellowship in the Royal Institute of Chemistry, London, England. Fellowship in the Royal Institute represents the highest professional chemistry award in England and is recognized internationally as one of the most prestigious memberships in the chemistry field. His election followed intensive research on the crystal structure of polymers at the Grymes Hill campus.

Dr. Addy notes that until 15 years ago, scientists believed that polymers — long-chained chemical molecules better known to most people in forms like nylon — had no structure. They now know that polymers do have distinct crystalized forms, and Dr. Addy's work has established the fact that these forms can be modified for important medical and commercial uses. A major example is modifying nylon for use in human tissue transplants. Since any nylon device placed in the human body must hold up for years, the polymer must be modified to provide more durable properties than are normally associated with it.

“Drama most hopeless of art” — Weill

“Drama is the most hopeless of all art forms. And people write plays simply because they’re driven.” Gus Weill, the soft-spoken, outspoken Southern playwright who captured the 1974 Stanley Drama Award, feels deeply that the art to which he has devoted a very real part of his being is in danger of disintegrating.

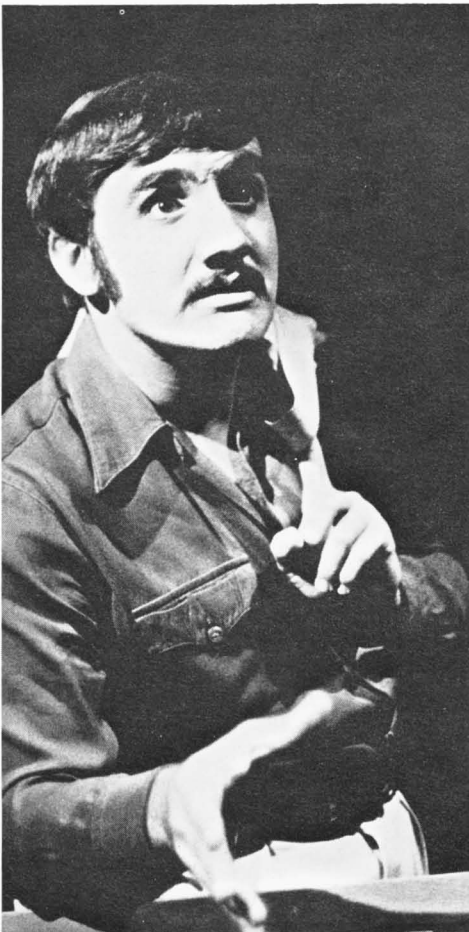

“Any art form that must, for its survival, satisfy one man — the critic of the New York Times — is sick,” says Weill. “It’s not Mr. Barnes; it’s just the man who holds that position. When you consider that all people write, produce, act and design to please this one individual, it boggles the mind.” Weill calls it “an Alice in Wonderland affair,” a situation that threatens to destroy the form. “A great work of art can die because one man had a migraine.”

When he submitted his prize-winning play last year, he did so with the conviction that drama is one of America’s most endangered species . . . knowing that “The Son of the Last Mule Dealer” was in trouble even before it was born. “I’m writing novels now,” he noted in a recent interview, “and there’s no way I would have undertaken to write another play without the encouragement of the Stanley Drama Award. This competition is one of the last outposts in the dying art form, and because of its past record, it’s the only competition I would have entered it in.”

Over the years the Stanley Award, which is administered by Wagner College under the direction of J.J. Boies, has launched the careers of some of this country’s brightest talents, including Lonne Elder, whose “Ceremonies In Dark Old Men” appeared on national television in January, and Megan Terry, whose Another highly successful theatre season is underway. Two plays have been presented; “Hemingway by Himself” as adapted for the theatre by Sam Smiley was given in October and last year’s successful performances of “Man of La Mancha” were repeated for a two-week engagement in December. “Dames at Sea” appears from March 6-9 and 11-15 and “Old Times” will cap the season from April 28 through May 3. Photos, from “Hemingway,” feature John Barone and Jeff Cannon as Hemingway.

"Hothouse" opened last fall at the Chelsea Theatre Center in Brooklyn. It now appears that the award has played a significant part in Weill's decision to continue working with a form that, in spite of its prominent place in American culture, faces a troubled future.

"The Stanley Drama Award represents one of the last places on earth that tells us it cares we are writing. Writing is such a solitary phenomenon that even the most vague hint that someone out there might be interested — or in some small way care — is a shot in the arm that I don't have the descriptive powers to even hint at." Largely because of the Stanley Award's influence, he noted, he is currently working on a new play — one that, in all likelihood, would have remained unwritten a few months ago. Titled "To Live or Die in a Spanish Villa by the Ocean," the play traces the life of a president who has been forced to resign his office, peering into his inner world ten years after the momentous event.

Weill is no newcomer to American theatre, and he has had two plays produced off-Broadway, including "Geese," which ran for over a year. In addition Citadel Press published his first novel, Paradiddle, last March, and this February Dial will publish his second novel, A Woman's Eyes.

Wagner senior goes to AEC lab

Anita Giobbie, a senior at Wagner College has been named one of six American college students selected to participate in a 16-week undergraduate research program in mathematics at the Atomic Energy Commission's Argonne National Laboratory in Illinois. She will join students from Harvard, Southern Illinois University, Western Illinois University, Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute, and Edinboro State College in research at Argonne's Code Center, and AEC-wide computer program exchange and information facility. She will return to the campus in May in time for graduation.

A straight-A mathematics student at Wagner, Miss Giobbie plans a career in college teaching and believes that her work at the Argonne Code Center will provide her with the kind of background a mathematics professor should have. "I think that to be really effective you should have a background in applied math — the practical applications of math in science and industry — as well as theory. Many people don't realize that our entire technology is built on mathematics, and even though you may not see math affecting you directly, most of the technological things around us, everything from bridges to space travel, are there because of math. I've been exposed in my Wagner studies to many of the methods I'll be working with at the Center," she notes, "but this research project will be a strong part of my education."

Choir completes 15-day tour

The Wagner College choir has completed a 15-day concert tour of New York and New Jersey. Under the direction of Dr. Arnold Running, now in his sixth year as choir director, the 42-member group appeared in 14 concerts hosted this year by a number of area Lutheran churches. The final concert was the traditional Homecoming Concert on campus January 19.

Like most of the group's past tours, the schedule provided for a number of side trips for the performers. Included in this year's visits was West Point, Atlantic City, Delaware and Valley Forge.

The choir's touring tradition goes back more than 30 years and has carried the Wagner singers to Europe and across America. This year's winter tour was a tune-up for a summer '75 tour of Germany and Austria — the group's third European appearance since 1952.

President Davidson discusses cooperative education program in Norway

President Arthur O. Davidson visited Norway for three days in early December during which he discussed with King Olav a cooperative education program that would bring Norwegian students to Wagner and other U.S. colleges and universities.

In his talks with King Olav and Norway's Royal Minister of Foreign Affairs Sverre Gjellem, Dr. Davidson stressed the availability of space in America's colleges and universities today, and suggested that Norway divert some of the income from its oil resources to an overseas education program that could ease a current space shortage in Norwegian institutions. "Like Germany and Austria, two other countries I have negotiated with on the same issue, Norway has more students interested in higher education than the country can presently provide for. All three of these countries will certainly be sending students to America in the near future, and I have invited government leaders and educators from each nation to visit our Staten Island campus to discuss an exchange program in more detail." Noting that this was the first he had approached the Norwegian government on the subject, he added that the idea was accorded "a most encouraging reception."

Under such a program, he noted, the country involved would underwrite the cost of educating large numbers of students in American institutions rather than embark on major construction programs in its own schools. The program would have a strong positive impact on the American colleges chosen, especially some of the country's small, private institutions, while providing both the foreign student and his American hosts with a unique experience in international education. At a press conference, Dr. Davidson told members of Norway's T.V., radio, and press that he stands ready to work toward an agreement on international education and restated the willingness of American institutions to cooperate in such a program.

"We at Wagner feel very strongly that we have more to offer in this kind of program than almost any other school, since we are in New York City yet can provide students with a rural campus setting for their studies. "A foreign student in New York," added Dr. Davidson, "will not be lonesome, because there are so many communities in which he will find people who speak his language and share his cultural background."

Dr. Davidson was in Oslo in his capacity as both Wagner president and 1975 national chairman of the Norwegian Immigration Sesquicentennial, a celebration that will reach eight major American cities and will be highlighted by a visit of the Norwegian Royal Party in New York next Oct. 7-10.

In memoriam

The Rev. Dr. Carl F. Yaeger '24H52 on November 12. Prior to his retirement in 1964, Dr. Yaeger was associate executive secretary of the Lutheran Service Commission, which directed a worldwide program of service and parish centers for men and women in the armed forces, in behalf of 15,000 Lutheran congregations in the U.S. and Canada. Before assuming the LSC post in 1951, Dr. Yaeger was a Lutheran World Relief Commissioner for three years, being stationed in the British Zone in Germany. In recognition of his outstanding work, he was the first foreigner to receive the "Wichern Medal", highest award bestowed by the Evangelical Church in Germany. He also served as a Navy chaplain during World War II. He is survived by his wife, Eleanor Ann, 7 Frames Ave., Pleasantville, N.J. 08232

Joseph J. Ward X39 on July 29. Ward had retired from the N.Y.C. Police Dept. six years ago and at the time of his death was working at New Dorp H.S., Staten Island. He is survived by his wife, Cecelia, a son and two daughters. Address: 187 Rose Ave., Staten Island, N.Y. 10306

Miss Ann Durrant '68 on December 21. She is survived by her parents, Mr. & Mrs. Arnold R. Durrant. Address: 33 Fair Way, Poughkeepsie, N.Y. 12604

Mary E. Barnes M73 in March. Before moving to Clinton, N.Y. Miss Barnes was a management analyst for the Navy Department on Staten Island. She is survived by two sisters, Mrs. Robert Desterfanis, Clinton, N.Y. and Mrs. Robert Hertwig, 10 Deverux Lane, Whitesboro, N.Y. 13492

Marianne R. Siss '74 on November 14, after a long illness. Marianne was employed by the Solomon R. Guggenheim Museum as an assistant to the project director, Title I, Children's Program. She is survived by her parents, Dr. & Mrs. Alfred Siss, two brothers and one sister. Address: 363 Smith Place, Wyckoff, N.J. 07481 run a larger ad here, but we would rather have more financial aid money for you.

Thanks to the Tuition Assistance Program — TAP — prospective college students living in New York State can get financial aid that may make Wagner's cost comparable to the cost of the State University of New York.

This is a new source of financial aid based on your parents' net taxable income (income after deductions). For example, if your parents have a net taxable income of $12,000, TAP would provide $670 to help cover the cost of tuition at Wagner.

The TAP program in no way reduces Wagner's present financial aid commitment to students, where in 1973-74 more than 950 students received $800,000 in aid or grants.

For the 1975-76 academic year, a full-time student will pay $2600 in tuition to attend Wagner College.

Remember, when TAP isn't enough, Wagner aid may still be available.
