Oppenheimer Management Chairman ('49): "It's Never Too Late to Get Started"

Any list of 10 of the most successful and prominent Wagner alums surely would include Donald W. Spiro ('49). This spring Don completed his twelfth year on the college Board of Trustees, the maximum a trustee can serve. He and his wife, Evelyn Lindfors Spiro ('49), recently established a scholarship fund: the Emily L. Spiro and Ragna Lindfors Memorial Scholarship in Nursing, named for their mothers. In 1970 Don started a scholarship fund in memory of his friend and classmate, former Navy pilot Joseph Paresi, who died in 1966, and Don Richards, his close high school buddy who was shot down over the Pacific during WW II.

In a recent interview Don talked about his career and offered some advice. If you have the desire to succeed, he said, it's never too late to get started.

O ne of Donald Spiro's perks as chairman of the board of the Oppenheimer Management Corporation is the spectacular view from his 26th-floor office at Two Broadway, overlooking Battery Park and New York Harbor. The panorama takes in Ellis and Liberty Islands and the lower harbor along the Jersey shore. From such a great height the boat carrying visitors out to the Statue of Liberty looks like a child's toy.

For Don the beautiful scene evokes memories of going to work after school in his father's business. "When I was in high school, making deliveries in our ship chandling business," he recalled, "I used to take boxes of food to the crew of the boat that goes out to Liberty Island. I was let off our delivery truck on Staten Island, and had to haul those boxes of food on a hand truck — like a pushcart — onto the Staten Island Ferry, then up the pier to the boat." Standing before the large window in his office and glancing down at the Liberty boat, he seemed to enjoy reminiscing about the teenager who schlepped a hand cart.

"It was in the family business that I first learned how to work - to sell, keep the books, do the advertising. At that time the business was a fancy butcher shop, really - a good one. We all worked hard - very long hours. Later, when I went to work full-time for my father, I would start out at 6:30 a.m. and finish at 6:30-7:00 p.m. Often, just as I was settling down at home for the evening, I'd get a call to make a delivery to a ship somewhere - New Brighton or even as far as Marcus Hook, Pennsylvania. I'd go out at night and climb the ladder onto some ship in all kinds of weather."

If there is a any advice he could offer on how to succeed in a career, Don said, it would be this: "You must have a desire to reach your goals. You have to be willing to make sacrifices. Work as hard as you can on each project that you undertake, as if you were going to be graded on it. And remember that it's never too late to get started."

Don's own career has taken some unexpected turns. He came relatively late to Wall Street and then very rapidly earned a series of significant promotions. Out of a sense of obligation he stayed for many years with Capitol Market, his father's Staten-Island-based company.

Booklet Explains New Tax Law

Tax advantages of gifts to Wagner College will change under the terms of the tax reform bill that recently became law as this issue of Wagner went to press.

Some effects are unpredictable; one is clear: Those paying at higher rates will generally realize more of a tax savings on gifts made in the 1986 calendar year than in 1987.

A helpful booklet will be available from the Wagner College Development Office once the bill becomes law. Called Impact of Tax Reform Act of 1986 On Year-End Planning, it advises:

Prepay 1987 contributions and increase 1986 contributions to secure the full benefits of the higher tax rates still in effect for 1986.

In transferring a gift of securities to Wagner, delivery date is crucial. Delivery is not completed until the company issues new stock certificates. To meet reliably an end-of-year deadline, it might be better to sell the stock and give the proceeds.

A copy of the booklet can be had by calling 718 390-3217 or using the Alumni News coupon inside to ask for one.

Wagner's Liberal Arts Tradition Prepares Students for 21st Century

The following remarks, reaffirming Wagner's liberal arts tradition, were given by Dr. Sam H. Frank, president, at commencement June 1, 1986.

n the 4th of July, this college community will join other citizens of New York City, the United States, and the world, in celebrating the centennial of the Statue of Liberty. This certainly will be a time of celebration. But it must also be a time of rededication to the ideals of the very best in the American tradition: ideals that have welcomed generations of immigrants to a life of increased freedom, hope, and opportunity in the New World.

It is in the spirit of this rededication, in the spirit of liberty, that I designate the Wagner College graduating class of 1986 as the liberty class.

This designation is timely for another reason. Two weeks ago, after thorough deliberation and by a special resolution, the Board of Trustees reaffirmed Wagner College's mission: to provide a liberating approach to higher learning. And in a workshop held this past week, the college faculty has rededicated itself to liberal education at Wagner.

The words "liberty," "liberating," and "liberal" — as in liberal arts — come from the Latin libertas, meaning "freedom," and liberare, "to free." Wagner College is a liberal arts college. The faculty provide, and the students receive, a liberating education.

Liberal arts, in this context, is not a matter of an institution's name, origins, governance, size, location, or architecture. The term comes from the Latin artes liberales, "work befitting a free person." A liberal arts college, such as Wagner, teaches academic specialties but sets them on a broad foundation of many disciplines. The student becomes a part of the total community of scholars, acquiring a thirst for learning throughout life and an appreciation of others and their views. One's individual pursuit of excellence develops the ability to think and communicate clearly, to make sound judgments; and to act responsibly. This is the ideal. But these attributes are essential equipment for functioning creatively and effectively in what is called the "real world."

It's not always clear what this "real world" is — the post-industrial era, the age of knowledge, the information age, to list a few descriptions. The world changes before our eyes. Our times are volatile, unsettled, unsettling — fascinating. We need to be both skilled and well educated if we are not only to cope with contemporary problems but to transcend them. Each of our honorees this afternoon has done this in a special way. Wagner College and her sister liberal arts colleges play a crucial role in helping to manage these challenging times.

Independent liberal arts institutions enroll only 20 percent of this nation's students; but from this small percentage come 33 percent of all baccalaureate degrees awarded in this country. Sixty-three percent of the nation's lawyers, 40 percent of our physicians, and 36 percent of those who complete Ph.D. degrees received their undergraduate degrees from independent liberal arts institutions. The members of Wagner College's Class of 1936 exemplify these rather startling statistics.

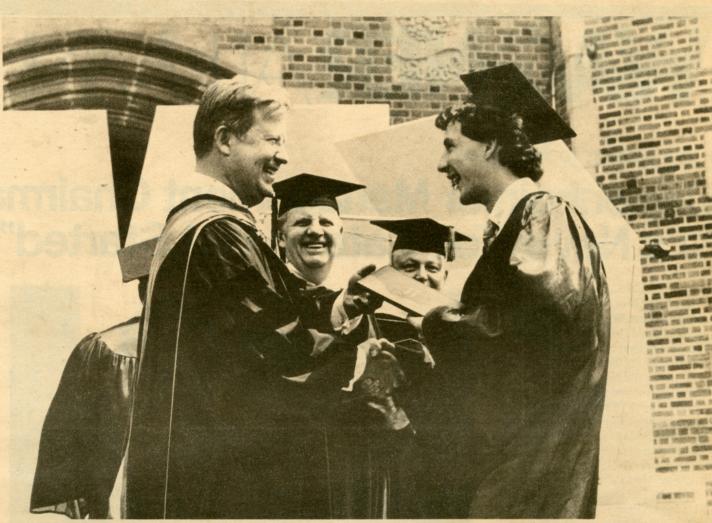

In all likelihood, neither the graduates of 50 years ago nor those of 25 years ago would have predicted the changes in America's economic environment. The country's economic survival will depend in large part on our ability to understand the international market-place and to live and work across national boundaries. In order to succeed in international enterprises, we need leaders who are literate in other cultures and economic systems as well as their own.

Today a person prepared for only one specific job is headed for obsolescence. Technology is changing too fast to allow people the luxury of one-track careers. One needs broadly applicable knowledge, because we cannot predict what skills will be needed to perform jobs in the future. We can predict, however, the need for people who can write and speak with clarity; who can manage and solve problems; and who can deal with two certainties of the immediate future: ambiguity and change.

Without doubt, we are in a new Information Age – an age in which people throughout the world increasingly will use computers and advanced communications systems as routinely as their parents used the telephone. There are micro-electronic devices that have two million circuit elements packed onto an area smaller than a postage stamp. Engineers are confident that by the end of the century they can squeeze at least a hundred million elements on a chipand manufacture it inexpensively. This could permit main frame computer capability on every student and faculty desk in the country - economically. Today the Teleport here on Staten Island can transmit almost two billion bits of information per second over glass fiberoptic lightguides.

These tremendous powers of communication will be worth little if we have nothing to say; if those who use these tools merely generate or disseminate data. The liberal arts education's breadth and depth, combined with its spirit of free inquiry, equip one to make those leaps of imagination and of faith which integrate information into knowledge. One of the greatest challenges of the next few decades will be to bring about technological transformations without endangering those values which are the hallmark of a free society. At Wagner, it is our aim to prepare our students to meet this challenge - sensitively, humanely, and wisely.

I am confident that the Liberty Class of 1986 will go on at least to match the achievements of their predecessors; that the light from their lives will shine as brightly as Miss Liberty's torch. We wish them the best of everything.

Liberty Weekend Still Shines Bright

The party's over but the memories of Liberty weekend will last a lifetime. The 100th birthday bash for Lady Liberty began on July 3 and ended on July 6. New York City had 175,000 visitors, including Wagner's 1,000 alumni who returned to Grymes Hill to share in the festivities sponsored by the Alumni Association, under the direction of Kevin Sheehy, president.

Wagner's guests started arriving on Thursday, July 3, in time to catch the tall ships as they glided through the harbor and up the Hudson River. Later that evening the roof of Harbor View provided the perfect place for viewing the relighting of the statue's torch.

The activities on July 4 began with a brunch in the main dining hall, and closed with a gala scholarship cocktail party on Harbor View roof, perfect settings for viewing the "Operation Sail Parade" and the spectacular fireworks display.

Celebrants closed the holiday weekend on a six-hour cruise around Staten Island, into Raritan Bay, under the Verrazano Narrows Bridge, and into New York Harbor, past the statue. Revenue raised from these events will go to the Wagner College Alumni Scholarship Fund which provides money to students in need.

Alums and friends agree that the spectacular 30-minute fireworks display Friday evening, as seen from Harbor View, was one of the high points of the weekend. "I drove here from Oklahoma, and I'm so glad I did. This weekend has been just great! The parties, the music, the people, and, of course, the fireworks made this a most memorable weekend. I wouldn't have missed it for the world," said Adele Buhlmann Moen, class of '44.

Born on the island, Don grew up in Port Richmond. After graduating from Port Richmond High School he joined the Army Air Corps at the age of 17. He had just completed a two-year flight training program when the war ended in 1945. He went to Wagner on the G.I. Bill, graduated in 1949 with a B.S. degree in business administration, and started working full-time for his father.

"I was 35 years old when I left the family business. It was very difficult for me to have to write on my resume that my only experience during the last 11 years was working for my father," he said.

A Trainee at Dreyfus

Leaving the family business and joining the staff of the Dreyfus Corporation in 1960 was a major turning point.

Dreyfus wanted a skilled salesman as a trainee who had no experience in the investment field. "I told them I was overqualified; I had spent all those years selling for Capitol, and I certainly had no idea what Wall Street was all about," he added with a smile.

Twenty-five candidates were interviewed for the Dreyfus job. As one of the finalists, Don visited a few of the leading brokerage firms that sold The Dreyfus Fund. He told the salesmen he had just inherited $10,000. He asked questions about "the company that has the lion in their television ads." The salespeople he spoke to were "very nice" about answering questions, but no one asked him to buy any Dreyfus Fund.

"I finally got the job by writing a very thorough report on my experiences as a prospective buyer. I didn't know at the time that I was preparing what today we would call a market research report. I put everything into that report—as if I were going to be graded on it." he recalled.

Earning a Partnership

At Dreyfus one of his accounts was Oppenheimer and Company. He did an enthusiastic and effective job of persuading the Oppenheimer brokers to sell Dreyfus Fund.

"The Oppenheimer people were selling so much Dreyfus Fund that their sales manager wanted to know why. They very soon offered me a job."

Don was earning $9,000 in 1960. He joined Oppenheimer and Company in 1962 at a salary of $20,000. He went to work there with the long-range ambition of becoming a general partner. Yet the man who hired him told him that, considering the large number of competitors for general partnerships, he was not likely to make it. Three years later Don was appointed vice president of sales. In 1968 he became a general partner of Oppenheimer and Company. He was elected president of the Oppenheimer Management Corporation in 1969. After the company was acquired in 1982 by Mercantile House Holdings of London, the largest money brokers in the world, he was elected to the board of directors and the executive committee that runs Mercantile. Now he commutes to London about once a month. On the Concorde (another perk) the trip takes only three and a half hours.

"What I liked about Oppenheimer is that the company always gave people a chance to demonstrate their abilities," Don explained. "When I first came to Wall Street there were plenty of Ivy Leaguers and people with strong family ties around. But nobody could buy their way into a partnership at Oppenheimer. You had to earn it. There's a kind of democracy about that."

Wagner Produces 10-Minute Video To Assist in Student Recruitment

If Don's own strong sense of commitment to his work was largely responsible for his success, the support of his wife, Evelyn, was equally important, he insisted. She was supervisor of the operating room of Staten Island Hospital when they were married 36 years ago.

"From the beginning it's always been 'we.' When I left my father's business, she told me that she would go out and find a job if my new job didn't pay enough. Fortunately she didn't have to, but what mattered then was that she would have done it."

Don, Evelyn, and their three children moved to Smoke Rise, NJ about 20 years ago. Don's father, now a lively 86, is retired and living on Staten Island. His picture, taken at a dance that he frequently attends, was in the Staten Island Advance recently. The family business, which played such a formative role in Don's life, was sold. His son and two daughters now are successfully pursuing their own careers.

Asked about his plans for retirement a few years away, Don replied thought-fully: "That's a tough one. I don't play golf. I don't play tennis. Maybe I'd like to write a couple of books advising young people on their career planning. I don't want any full-time commitment when I retire. Writing would give me the freedom I want.

"Most college undergraduates really don't know what kind of work they'd prefer. How could they? Most of them have limited working experience. Yet their fathers constantly ask them what they want to do, as if a college education provided the answer. They need to try a few different kinds of jobs. I told my kids when they graduated that I would never question how many different jobs they held — up to the age of 30. At that age you should know. You need some work experience to help you decide."

It's helpful for people starting out to take psychological tests to attempt to learn where their interests lie and then match these interests with the opportunities in emerging growth companies and industries, Don suggested. Television was one such industry that interested him at one time, he said.

Wagner, he feels, is "a great place." He received the Alumni Achievement Award in 1967, has headed fund drives, and recently completed his fourth term on the Board of Trustees, during which he served as vice chairman. His son also is a Wagner graduate. Yet Don enjoys telling the story of how he almost did not go to Wagner.

'When I got out of the Air Force after World War II, I figured I'd go to Princeton. I had the G.I. Bill, so my parents weren't going to be burdened with the expense. Then one day my friend Joe Paresi asked me to ride along with him up to the Wagner campus. Walking around, we ran into this professor with a beard. The professor welcomed Joe back to the college and asked if he was going to continue with math as a major - to which Joe answered 'yes.' Then the professor turned to me and asked me if I was going to Wagner too. I said yes, I guessed I would. He asked me what I was planning to major in. I said that if math was OK for Joe, it was for Don later switched to a business major at Wagner. He was a member of Delta Nu fraternity.

Through the stories and reminiscences Don comes across as a person who understands his own past and has come to terms with it. He seems to feel comfortable putting it all in perspective:

"One of the perks of being chairman of this company is that you have your own limousine for transportation. When I used to drive myself, I'd leave home every morning at 6:30 to beat the traffic. Now that I have a chauffeur, I no longer have to leave so early. The traffic doesn't matter if your car is your office. But I still leave at 6:30 every day. I don't know why exactly. I guess maybe I still think I have to get up at dawn and take food to some ship's crew at New Brighton or down at Marcus Hook. Maybe that's what I'm really doing."

Reprinted from the Staten Island Advance

A helicopter recently was hovering above Wagner College, and one of its passengers was taking pictures of the Grymes Hill campus.

The photographs are part of a "new and progressive marketing tool," said Richard Porter, vice president of development and community relations. The pictures are now part of a slide and audio presentation that has been transferred to videocassette.

"The nature of things today is more competitive," Porter said. The number of college-bound students has decreased, and higher education institutions are seeking students through sophisticated, slick and persuasive promotion pieces. "It's a students' market," he said.

The 10-minute presentation will be shown during student recruitment campaigns, on and off campus. Video-cassettes can also be sent to schools, or even to individuals, he said, so students and their parents can see the "benefits of going to Wagner College" in their homes.

The slide show portrays Wagner as a liberal arts college with many choices. Although near Manhattan, and all the borough offers, the school's campus is tree-lined and gracious in a quiet suburban setting. Wagner's small classes offer an intimate environment and a lot of individual attention; that, too, is expressed in the presentation, Porter said.

Students, faculty, administrators and alumni are featured in the show including Donald Spiro, a board of trustee member, and Richard Kotite, New York Jets' offensive coordinator, both Wagner alumni.

The slide show cost $15,000 and was partially paid for by a $7,500 grant from the Aid Association for Lutherans. It was produced by Audio Vistas Inc., a Manhattan firm that has made presentations for other schools including New York University, Porter said.

As an investment in the school's future, "It will be a very good tool for our admissions," he said.

Classes of '36 and '61 Hold Reunion

This year's alumni awards went to an actor, a state Supreme Court justice, a superintendent of schools, and a state senator. One hundred and seventy-five guests attended the alumni reunion dinner for the classes of 1936 and 1961, held on May 31, 1986. Those representing the class of 1936 were: Dr. Charles N. Accettola, Henry J. Baechler, The Rev. Robert A. Boettger, Rolf E. Danielson, The Rev. Karl A. Eberhardt, The Rev. Peter H. Elstad, Arthur D. Friedel, George W. Guttler, The Rev. Erwin Jaxheimer, The Rev. Fredrik P. Nissen, Dr. W. R. Procci, and Dr. Paul V. Rogler.

During the evening the Alumni Association honored alumni, a faculty member, and an administrator. Film actor Robert Loggia, Class of 1951, received an alumni achievement award. Others given this award were: Justice Ralph A. Beisner '64 of the New York State Supreme Court; Louis DeSario '52 M57, a community superintendent of city schools, district 31 (Staten Island); and Stephen R. Deutsch '65, a Rhode Island state senator.

Dr. Eli Kapostins and Stanley R. Shilling received merit awards. Kapostins recently retired from his position as chairperson of the Psychology Department after serving for more than 30 years. Shilling is director of auxiliary services and purchasing agent for the college.

Mildred E. Olsen '50 was given the service award for her demonstrated commitment to the college.

After leaving Wagner over 35 years ago, Loggia went on to establish himself in the worlds of theater and cinema. The Motion Picture Academy nominated him last year for best supporting actor for his role in The Jagged Edge. Additionally, Loggia starred in the highly acclaimed Prizzi's Honor, Scarface, and An Officer and a Gentleman.

Justice Beisner, recently elected to the Wagner Board of Trustees, has been on the State Supreme Court since 1984. He practiced law in Dutchess County from 1979 to 1983 and was assistant New York State attorney general for Poughkeepsie from 1973 to 1979. Prior to 1973, he served as assistant district attorney for Queens, New York.

Even with reduced allocations for education, Louis DeSario continues to demonstrate strong leadership as community superintendent of city school district 31. He has been instrumental in continuing a tradition of excellence in the district, focusing on curricula, performance, and school management. His innovative programs, such as the Cooperative Diagnostic Reading Center and Enrichment for Gifted and Talented Students, help foster students' intellectual and personal growth.

Senator Deutsch was elected to the Rhode Island State Senate in 1983 and was re-elected the following year. He was recognized for his efforts in education and on highway safety.

Dr. Kapostins has been a member of Wagner's Psychology faculty since 1956. The National Institute of Mental Health has awarded him numerous research grants, resulting in publications in scholarly journals.

Stan Shilling joined the Wagner administrative staff in 1967 as director of personnel and purchasing. From 1980 to the present he has been director of auxiliary services and purchasing agent. He supervises the college bookstore, postal and copy centers, maintenance, housekeeping, and the telephone and transportation systems.

Mildred E. Olsen, who has served as recording secretary for the Alumni Association, reunion chairperson for her class, telefund caller, and alumni flea market chairperson, was recognized for her service to the college.

The evening's success was due, in large part, to the Reunion Committee: Linda Skrod Peters, Lelah Carlton Urban, and Gale Tollefsen Bellafiore.

Wagner Theatre Presents Musical

The Wizard of Oz will be performed Dec. 3 - 6 and 10 - 13 at 8:30 p.m. Matinees: Dec. 6, 13 at 2:30 p.m.

Retired Faculty Die: Dr. Running, 71 Dr. Kegley, 74

Two former faculty members who taught at the college for many years died recently. Dr. Arnold Running, 71, music professor at Wagner from 1979 until his retirement in 1982, died on June 13. Dr. Charles Kegley, 74, who taught philosophy from 1949 to 1969, died of cancer on September 1.

Dr. Running, who lived on Todt Hill (Staten Island) before retiring to Williamstown, MA, spent his final days in the Berkshire Medical Center. Throughout his life he traveled extensively in Europe. Although he "retired" in 1982, his wife recently explained that "he was an excellent carpenter and craftsman. In fact, right up until the time of his ill health, he was working on the restoration of a Victorian house in Williamstown."

While at Wagner, he directed the choir, the Richmond Choral Society, and many church affiliated choral groups. He also directed a choir while on sabbatical in West Germany. His musical involvement led to his performing in various European and American tours. After one such tour, Dr. Running was decorated by King Olav of Norway with the St. Olaf medal for Norwegian cultural heritage service.

Surviving are his wife, Joyce, and their two children, Benjamin and Rachel. Also surviving are five children and five grandchildren from his first marriage. Running's first wife, Jean Lee, died in 1973.

Dr. Kegley served as a professor of philosophy at Wagner. He left to join California State University in Bakersfield. His wife, Jacquelyn Ann, teaches philosophy and chairs the Department of Religious Studies there.

While at Wagner, Dr. Kegley edited The Library of Living Theology and wrote numerous books and scholarly articles. The college presented him with a distinguished teaching award, and he was named outstanding professor at California State University. His academic service also included visiting professorships. A grant from the Rockefeller Foundation enabled him to teach at the University of the Philippines. He retired in May 1986 and was named professor emeritus by California State University in June.

He is survived by his wife, three sons, a daughter, and three grandchildren.
