Military High Court Upholds Sodomy Ban

Eric Johnston, PlanetOut Network

The nation's highest military court declined to strike down the armed forces' ban on consensual sodomy, letting stand a conviction against Air Force Sergeant Eric Marcum in Washington, D.C., on Monday.

The U.S. Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces sidestepped the broader question of the validity the military's sodomy law -- Article 125 of the Uniform Code of Military Justice -- by ruling against Marcum on the grounds that his sexual partner was in his chain of command, a violation of military protocol. Several civil rights groups had urged the military to strike down Article 125 on the basis of last year's U.S. Supreme Court decision in Lawrence vs. Texas, which struck down all state laws prohibiting consensual sodomy.

"Private, consensual conduct in the bedroom has no impact on the battlefield," said C. Dixon Osburn, executive director of Servicemembers Legal Defense Network "Our country right now needs to fight terrorists, not pry into people's private lives." Article 125 applies both to heterosexual and homosexual sodomy, regardless of where the act takes place, meaning that even married couples could be prosecuted for committing sodomy in the privacy of their own homes.

The court left open whether it would declare Article 125 unconstitutional in future cases. Some legal experts say such a ruling is inevitable.

"The end of the military's ability to criminalize private consensual sex is in sight," said James Esseks, litigation director for the American Civil Liberty Union's Lesbian and Gay Rights Project. "There are at least eight other cases pending before lower military courts that will likely chip further away at Article 125."

Tina Rice, a transgender activist and retired U.S. Army sergeant, told the PlanetOut Network the sodomy law is outdated.

"I think it's past its time," she said. "I don't think the government should be in our bedrooms in any way shape or form, whether it's military or civilian life."

However, Rice said she agreed with the military for punishing Marcum for having sexual relations with a subordinate.

Is Chivalry Dead?

I went to the Josh Groban Concert when he came to the Qwest center recently. Those of you who know this artist also know he is a romantic. He sings love songs. In reading his interview he is a one lady man and can be a homebody. This sounded like the dream guy for me. It also made me ask the question "Is chivalry dead?"

Here when we go to the bars we might occasionally get a date, but what about romance? Is there a spark or do people just go through the motions?

The answer is that chivalry is not dead, it is just not common. I have found people who are romantic and yet do it in a way that respects the dignity of the human being. These are not the people I date nor do I claim to be a person of chivalry, but I am a victim of it. I am able to look at a couple of my best friends and they defend my honor quite well and respect what I do. They also do things out of the ordinary like give me flowers and small gifts to let me know I am appreciated.

Take my good friend Mark for example. I never know what to expect when I am around him. One day I show up and he may have been shopping and buys me something as a gesture of friendship. That is Chivalry. To top Mark's nature up, he is always concerned about the perception I give. This can be a form of chivalry.

My other friend Larry knows when to say the right words and relate to me on my level. He is the type where we can be walking through the old market and he buys me a flower or buys me lunch. Again he is a person who cares much for my well being.

The interesting thing about chivalry it is not necessarily about physical intimacy. With neither of my friends is it being sexually intimate, but being more connected in an emotional or spiritual bond.

It took me a while to put it into perspective. I always thought chivalry had to be the prince on the white horse, realizing now that the knights are not always the ones out to win your heart, but are more champions of your honor. Friends who can connect in this way are very special and are keepers. Cherish them, for you never know if you will ever get another knight who will champion your cause. I hope my knights know I love them so.

Formal and Informal

A lot of people don't know the difference between the two. It's basically numbers. For instance one sofa on each side of a fireplace (2 sofas same size) with a coffee table in the middle (1) and by hanging a picture in the center of the wall above the fireplace with sconces on each side (3) that would be considered formal. A total of 6 items were used. If you were to use a sofa with a chair to either side (2) with an end table and coffee table (2) and to hang one large picture to one side of the wall and then two smaller ones (3) to the other side of the fireplace that would be an informal setting. A total of 7 pieces were used. Odd is considered informal and even is considered formal in most cases.

More formal and informal examples can be found in your bedroom, a bed with night stands (3) on both sides with 2 pillow shams, two pillows (4) and lamps on both sides (2) would be formal even though its an odd number because you really don't count the bed, the pillows and bed become one. Take away one of those lamps or add or subtract a pillow it becomes informal.

Most people's concept of formal and informal is associated with the type of furniture not the setting. For example if you see an ornate Victorian sofa you think formal, or a sleek black leather sofa you think informal, the same would go for a fancy head board or a contemporary one. If you apply this to the examples you can see how they could be used either way.

With Picture hanging it is a little different just like the bed thing, one picture on a wall flanked by even number of pictures or sconces or other ornamentations on a wall, say 3, 5 or 7 is considered formal because there is an even number of things on each side of the focal point. If you were to hang a large picture to one side or the other and smaller pieces to the other side, an even or odd amount, as long as they are to one side or the other of the main picture, it would be considered informal.

I could go on and on about different examples of the two but as long as you have the basics you should be ok. I hope some of my information has helped you when it comes to decorating your living spaces...any questions or if you are in need of an interior design consultant please contact me by email at bradybunch1970@hotmail.com.

"When you have something like that happen, you have (the potential for) favoritism being shown to that person, as far as jobs and other duties are concerned," she said.

Marcum was a cryptologic linguist and the supervising non-commissioned officer for a group of Persian-Farsi speaking intelligence analysts stationed at Offutt Air Force Base in Omaha, Neb.

He was convicted in May of 2001 of engaging in consensual sodomy with a fellow airman in the privacy of his home. He was sentenced to 10 years in prison, and the term that was later cut to six years. Marcum is now on parole.

Rainbow Grannies End Their Long Journey for Equality in New York City

Elisia and Carrie Ross-Stone, known as the Rainbow Grannies, finished their second cross-country bicycle ride in New York City on July 10, 2004. Riding into Greenwich Village at the foot of Christopher Street, the Grannies were welcomed by organizers of Marriage Equality New York, Front Runners and members of the Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual and Transgendered (LGBT) cycling group known as Fast and Fabulous who accompanied them for the last leg of their 3800 mile journey.

The couple, who are life partners, parents to three grown children and grandmothers to Jareth, age 2, departed from San Francisco on May 2 to begin their arduous trek over mountain ranges and across deserts and prairies. As they pedaled, they stopped to participate in rallies for marriage equality in cities and towns along their route.

While they made their way across the country, Carrie and Elisia met with people face-to-face and told the story of their own family. They talked about the hardship of raising children without legal rights and protections – protections that are only available to legally recognized families. They shared their fears of growing older without the benefit of governmental programs paid for by their tax dollars.

Along the way, Elisia and Carrie challenged stereotypes and confronted lies with their truth. They have a unique ability to redirect the dialogue about same-sex marriage. They reveal to people that they and other LGBT families have needs and desires similar to those held by all American citizens -- the right to a private life where they can enjoy equality, justice and the pursuit of happiness without interference by the government.

The 2004 ride has been captured on film by award winning filmmaker, Keith Wilson who has created a documentary called A Time to Ride. The film documents the Grannies struggle, their courage and their determination in the face of hostility, protests and death threats.

A Time to Ride is not just the story of the Rainbow Grannies. It is about the hope of every LGBT American who has lived their entire life as a second-class citizen. The film tells the story of real gay and lesbian families whose lives are affected by politicians and religious zealots who use fear and ignorance for their own profit and political gain. A Time to Ride will be available for viewing by mid-September to give voters an opportunity to understand what is really fueling the marriage equality controversy. To see a trailer of the documentary, visit www.ATimeToRide.com. Please help to spread the film's important message by organizing a showing in your community before the November 2 election!

This is the second cross country bicycle ride for Carrie and Elisia. Calling their ride the Rainbow Ride Across America, they first rode across the southern US in 2003, from Saint Augustine Florida to San Diego California. Plans are currently underway for the third and final ride from Seattle to Boston during the summer of 2005.

To see photos of the ride and read the Rainbow Ride journal, please visit www.RainbowLaw.com and follow the links to the Rainbow Ride Across America.

Gary Boston and Jeff Adler of <http://www.shutitdownnyc.com/> are urging gay and straight actors alike to call in sick, especially for the eight GOP-approved Broadway shows: Aida, 42nd Street, The Lion King, Fiddler on the Roof, Phantom of the Opera, Beauty and the Beast, Bombay

Broadway Tells Bush Lovers To Bugger Off

Republican National Convention attendees were recently given a list of "approved" Broadway shows they could attend while in New York for the convention. Missing from the list was every gay-themed production on the Great White Way - although, on Broadway, we question whether there really ARE any non-gay themed shows. Anyway. The New York Daily News reported this week that some Broadway folks are organizing a protest to try to make sure that RNC attendees won't be able to see ANY Broadway productions while they are in town.

The organizers of an anti-Bush protest are doing their best to shut down the strip on the day before Bush's speech at the convention.

Dreams and Wonderful Town. There are a lot of gay people in the Broadway community, Boston told the Daily News, and this is basically asking them to sing and dance for them while they're writing them out of the Constitution. We say, Bravo.

Bush Says States Can Recognize Gay Couples

by Paul Johnson
365Gay.com Newscenter
Washington Bureau Chief

(Washington) In a bid to recapture the middle ground from Democratic presidential candidate John Kerry President Bush now says states can provide legal recognition to gay and lesbian couples with civil unions. But, he continues to call for an amendment to the US Constitution to bar gay marriage.

"That's up to states," Bush told CNN's Larry King Thursday night. "If they want to provide legal protections for gays, that's great. That's fine. But I do not want to change the definition of marriage. I don't think our country should."

When asked about federal benefits for same-sex couples Bush pointed to inheritance taxes which are lower for people who are married Bush said gays should support Republican moves to get of inheritance taxes altogether.

The president told King that gay couples should work with Congress not depend on 'activist judges'.

It is the first time that Bush has said he could support states enacting civil union legislation and the first time he has hinted he might support providing limited rights.

Bush's new 'kinder gentler' position comes as polls show the race is razor close, but Kerry with a slight lead.

The president's words were dismissed by gay activists as nothing more than a callous move to appear to be a moderate.

"I think the president may be feeling a backlash, Human Rights Campaign spokesperson Steven Fisher told 365Gay.com.

"The American people reject discrimination and want him to concentrate on issues they care about, the war and the economy."

Fisher said that as long as Bush continues to support a constitutional amendment "that would be with us for generations he cannot claim to be a moderate."

Kerry also opposes gay marriage but is against amending the US Constitution. However, Kerry has also indicated his support for an amendment to the Massachusetts state constitution to ban gay marriage. The Democratic nominee says he supports legal rights for same-sex couples including civil unions.

(This sure sounds like a flip flop on his position to me. Could it be that Bush is concerned that his hard right religious base may not be as supportive as he had imagined?.....Editor)
