Applause, Cheers, Celebration How Grand It Was

“We Are Back!” exclaimed Gail Naughton, president/CEO, amid applause and cheers at the National Czech & Slovak Museum & Library’s Grand Opening.

After four years of moving between interim locations, the Museum and Library is now open in its original and now expanded home at 1400 Inspiration Place SW, Cedar Rapids, Iowa. With a facility three times larger than pre-Flood, staff offices, galleries, the library and event spaces are all united under one red roof with room to grow.

One festive weekend began on Saturday, July 14 with a parade from New Bohemia to Czech Village. Eighteen states showed their support in the Parade of States Pageant, with additional parade floats and entries including Czech and Slovak dignitaries and Alphonse Mucha’s grandson. Czech and Slovak pageant royalty tossed candy to the crowds lining 16th Avenue.

Crowds shifted to the recently named Inspiration Place to watch the opening ceremony. Speakers praised the accomplishments of Cedar Rapids and wished the Museum and Library the best of luck. Two pageant queens presented customary bread and salt to welcome the officials. Scissors snipped the red and blue ribbons.

Gail led the way into the relocated and expanded building. Within the first fifteen minutes, more than 5,000 curious and eager guests flowed into Rozek Grand Hall, marveling at the new Museum and Library.

Visitors from all over Iowa and across the nation lined up for tickets to the exhibitions. Hemphill Theater, featuring films about the Monumental Move and Alphonse Mucha’s life and works, was standing-room-only. WFLA/ZCJB Heritage Hall was packed for all five Lecture Series presentations.

Outside, more people gathered for food and fun. Smiles spread across the spectators watching Czech and Slovak folk dancers swirling in their kroje (folk costumes) to traditional folk music. A concert stage stood

FROM OUR PRESIDENT

“A museum is not just a building, it’s really the hearts and souls of the community and we still have those intact.” My son Greg sent those words with flowers the day after the 2008 Flood. They sustained me through four long years of recovery but their meaning was never more evident than during the Grand Opening. The NCSML community—friends, members, Czechs, Slovaks, people of all backgrounds, from near and far—shared their hearts and souls with us that weekend. We were touched and overwhelmed by the joy and enthusiasm for the new Museum and Library. Yes, we were celebrating a building, but it was so much more.

It was a celebration of an expanded beginning when all things are possible. We’ve proven that we can rise to any challenge and not only survive but excel beyond all expectations. We’ve shown the world that adversity can be turned into victory.

Today, the NCSML looks on a bright future, a future as a place where anyone from anywhere can appreciate the stories, experiences and contributions of Czechs and Slovaks. Because in learning about others, we learn about ourselves. After all, the Czech and Slovak peoples’ search for freedom is a story we all share. It’s a human story.

On Saturday night of Grand Opening, as everyone sat outside watching the fun and entertaining Caravan of Thieves, I looked around and saw people sitting in chairs in front of the stage; there were people in the beer tent, people sitting on the grass, on the curb, on the steps and on the planters. This scene captured my hopes and dreams for the new NCSML as no other that day. The silence at the end of the light show moved me as I know it did many others. I felt that we had finally come home. And all of our hearts and souls were not only intact but glowing.

Enjoy this special issue of MOST with highlights of the opening. Plan on returning often to the Museum and Library. It’s your home.

All my best,

Gail Naughton

Miss Czech-Slovak USA 2001-2002 Lisa Volesky (center) and Miss Czech-Slovak Iowa 2009-2010 Amanda De Hoedt present bread and salt to Senator Tomáš Grulich, Parliament of the Czech Republic.

Presentation of bread and salt is a Czech and Slovak tradition for welcoming important, respected or admired guests. It is also a housewarming tradition for happiness and luck.

We did it! The Museum and Library has come back from the 2008 Flood stronger and bigger than before.

We began our celebration with a Black Tie Gala on Friday evening. Then, on Saturday, July 14, we continued with a two-day festival complete with a parade and floats; the Czech Plus Band; and a ribbon-cutting ceremony featuring the Czech Ambassador Petr Gandalovič, Peter Zeleňák, Slovak Chargé d'Affaires a.i., Senator Harkin and Senator Grassley along with other dignitaries. Saturday morning was hot, but we still had an overflow crowd of supporters. And it was certainly grand!

I greeted visitors at the front door for two hours, and, with the steady stream of people coming and going, the door never closed. People came from 38 states to help us celebrate this historic event. I want to thank the NCSML Board of Directors for volunteering to greet people, to give tours of the newly relocated and expanded building and to pour Czech beer. The staff was busy organizing dancers, puppets, face painting, musicians, food vendors, beer tasting and exhibit tours.

If you haven't visited the new Museum and Library yet, please make plans to do so. You will be amazed at the stunning appearance and all we have accomplished. And if you have visited us, thank you! We hope you will come back soon. The unique Alphonse Mucha exhibit is a once-in-a-lifetime event and is a must-see for anyone interested in the Art Nouveau movement. While you're there, check out the lovely new Store filled with incredible merchandise directly from the Czech Republic and Slovakia. If you're looking for a place to host a wedding, a service club meeting or just a party, be sure to contact the Museum and Library for the hottest venue in town.

Most of all, please visit and bring your friends and family. This is your Museum and Library and we hope to see you soon.

Sincerely,

Lu Barta Barron

Q: What's one thing you can give to the NCSML that costs you NOTHING?

A: Your email address!

In return, you'll get timely information about the NCSML ...and the NCSML won't have to slap a stamp on it!

If you haven't already provided us with your email address, please do so by sending us an email at eschlegel@NCSML.org. Put your name and your postal address in the body of the email (just so we can make sure it is you!).

If you need an incentive, we have one!

We'll enter every email we receive in response to this request into a drawing for a $50 gift certificate that can be spent on anything in the NCSML Museum Store. But, you need to send us your email address by Nov. 1, 2012. The drawing will be held on Nov. 2, 2012.

Eight Weeks Until Grand Opening

NCSML staff toss their hard hats in celebration of receiving the key to 1400 Inspiration Place SW.

Judi Lynch, from Paulson Electric (right), secures a wire cover to the chandelier. There are 48 environmentally-friendly light bulbs in the chandelier. Three-watt LED bulbs will draw a total of 144 watts compared to the previous 1,920 watts of electricity. Nine people worked on the chandelier over four days. Fully assembled, the chandelier weighs about 500 pounds and is eight feet tall.

The Czech-made chandelier, donated by siblings Leora and Edwin Zahorik, hangs in the newly relocated and renovated building. It is a tradition for couples wedded at the Museum and Library to kiss underneath the crystal chandelier.

Six Weeks Until Grand Opening

A worker from Roger Gwinnup Construction paints the exterior of the Sleger Immigrant Home its original color. Layers of paint were stripped from the house, both outside and inside, to find the true 1800s colors.

Grant Smith, facilities director, guides Ashley Swore, a mover from T & M Services Inc., to the room he needs inside of 1400 Inspiration Place SW. Movers made the transition from the Kosek building (87 16th Avenue) smoother and simpler.

Just Four Weeks to Go

In the Petrik Gallery, Collections Manager Tricia Bender arranges a woman's kroj from Domažlice, Bohemia. Tricia curated the "It All Comes Out in the Wash" exhibition featuring textiles and 26 kroje painstakingly restored after the 2008 Flood.

The grandest delivery arrives four weeks before the Grand Opening: a Yamaha grand piano dedicated in honor of the 60th wedding anniversary of Bev & Gene Kadlec from their son and his family, Thomas, Le Ann, Carleen and Chase Kadlec.

Interns John Szymanek and Mariah Cook work with Cataloging Librarian Leroy Bradway to prepare books for cataloging in the Skala Bartizal Library. The new Library, now six times larger, features 5,400 sq. ft., complete with books, periodicals, A/V and archival materials. It also contains media and research rooms.

Stephanie Russell, a visitor services intern, hands out maps to guests from the National Railway Historical Society Convention. The group had access to portions of the building and acted as a test tour group for staff and volunteers on June 20.

Volunteers Mel and Carolyn Holubar label crystal for the Museum Store. Dedicated volunteers, many of whom helped after the 2008 Flood, assisted in opening preparations. During Grand Opening weekend, 191 volunteers gave nearly 800 hours.

Two Weeks and Counting . . .

President of the American Alliance of Museums, Ford Bell, tours the Kosek building's "Rising Above: the Story of a People and the Flood" exhibit on July 2 with President/CEO Gail Naughton. The NCSML is one of 778 accredited museums out of 17,500 in the United States.

Susan Sokolsky, executive assistant, answered calls from across the nation. She coordinated visits of dignitaries and kept the staff and office organized.

One Week Until the Big Day

George Szlemp, experienced art installer, prepares to hang a piece of the exhibit “Alphonse Mucha: Inspirations of Art Nouveau” in the Jiruska Gallery. With only two weeks between the arrival of the 230-piece collection and Grand Opening, installation efforts were intense yet careful.

Mucha Trust Curator Tomoko Sato looks through diagrams of the Mucha exhibit. Sato oversaw the entire installation inside the 7,232 sq. ft. exhibition space—the Museum and Library’s largest gallery.

Final Days Until Opening

Volunteer Chloe Colgan takes a play break with Detoa wooden toys from the Czech Republic while stocking shelves in the Museum Store.

Donors toast the new Museum and Library in Rozek Grand Hall. A President’s Luncheon was held to honor and thank each naming donor for supporting and contributing to the new Museum and Library.

Iowa Senator Tom Harkin, left, talks with Jack Evans of The Hall-Perrine Foundation at the July 13 Gala. Donors and contributors were thanked for their support and generosity.

Felicia Vera, assistant facility rental manager, (right) pours wine at the pre-Grand Opening tour for construction crews. The Museum and Library hosted several tours to thank construction crews, members, sponsors, media and neighbors from Czech Village and New Bohemia.

Grand Opening Weekend

Lu Barta Barron, board of directors chair, Katie Naughton, Gail's daughter-in-law, and Gail Naughton, president/CEO, smile and wave in the Parade of States Pageant.

The koláče drill team brought smiles to the faces of many between New Bohemia and Czech Village during the Parade of States Pageant.

With everyone dressed in authentic folk costumes, the Hamous and Naxera families walk in the Parade of States down 16th Avenue, Cedar Rapids. In total, 19 members of the Hamous families gathered at the Grand Opening to walk in the parade and participate in other festivities.

Gail Naughton, president/CEO sums up the Grand Opening of the National Czech & Slovak Museum & Library in three words: "We are back!"

Crowds pour into Rozek Grand Hall as soon as the front doors open. Staff, interns and volunteers were quick on their feet. During the two-day celebration, an estimated 12,000 – 14,000 people visited and participated in the activities.

COUNTDOWN TO RECOVERY

St. Paul Czech and Slovak Folk Dancers perform in the Rockwell Collins Amphitheater on Saturday, July 14.

A mother shows her son a photo of him wearing the crown he decorated in the Alliant Energy Classroom. Along with the Creation Station's make-and-take crafts, activities including face painting, balloon animals, caricatures and Czech & Slovak story time were for the young and the young-at-heart.

Joyce Kutin, Museum Guild member, packages koláče in the Paulson Electric Kitchen. Baked goodies were in high demand from Babi's Bakery on the Naxera Terrace and koláče sold out early.

John Mucha, Alphonse Mucha's grandson, answers questions from Clarice Marik Snokhous (wife of Raymond J. Snokhous, Honorary Consul of the Czech Republic State of Texas) from West, Texas and Obediah O'Connor from Minneapolis, Minnesota. Mucha also spoke in WFLA/ZCJB Heritage Hall about the Mucha Trust's efforts to preserve his grandfather's legacy.

A mother and her son look at an illustration inside the exhibit, "Weird & Wonderful: Award Winning Art for Children's Books," in the Smith Gallery. The exhibit features 76 Biennial of Illustrations Bratislava winners. The center of the exhibit is arranged with bean-bag chairs and copies of some of the books featured in the exhibit for interested readers.

A Building Blessing commences Sunday's activities. Several area churches and choirs united to bless the newly opened building.

atop the former location of the Museum and Library, where several musicians serenaded listeners. A light show that covered the face of the building topped off the evening.

Eager for more, groups returned Sunday. Beginning with a beautiful Building Blessing, the day held activities for all ages. Inside, children and parents gathered to create art in the Alliant Energy classroom and listen to folk tales in the Skala Bartizal Library. Audiences assembled for the Czechoslovak-American Marionette Theatre from New York City. Two sold-out performances of The White Doe captivated crowds.

Outside, tents buzzed with laughs, conversations and camera clicks. Face painters, a balloon artist, a caricaturists and the Brass Barn Polka Band entertained the young and the young-at-heart.

Inside, fingers pointed to the crystal chandelier in Rozek Grand Hall. Eyes explored the brick arch that marked the gateway into the building addition. Minds still fathoming the life and work of Alphonse Mucha left the Jiruska Gallery amazed. Ears listened to Skala Bartizal Library staff informing them of ways to discover their hidden heritage. Hands covered gasps inside the Hemphill Theater as viewers watched footage of a flooded Czech Village, piles of debris and the muck-covered treasures. Those who witnessed the devastation of the 2008 Flood firsthand, and some seeing it for the first time, watched a Museum and Library truly rise above the heartbreak.

Grand Opening weekend was much more than a fun, action-packed weekend. July 14 and 15, 2012 commenced something greater: the renewal of a purpose reaching across the globe; the promise that the preservation of Czech and Slovak history and culture will not be dampened by any amount of water or cost. The promise that the same strength and freedom encapsulated by the very Czechs and Slovaks we represent and celebrate will be here to inspire people of all backgrounds.

Gather the Family for a Holiday Tradition
