

H O M E

Not long ago a young man in college went home for a week-end. It was unexpected and rather perplexing to the parents, for it was an expensive trip and money was scarce.

But they quietly welcomed him and enjoyed his visit, unquestioning. A day or so after his return to college, they received a letter from him. "I know you wondered at my coming," he wrote, "but I feel I must. Many things have been disturbing me lately, unsettling my faith, overturning my philosophy, bringing doubt and darkness to my soul. I just had to come home to get within its atmosphere and feel that sureness of everything again. I found it."

What a tribute to home.---John Price.
