

PASSERS BY may have thought there was an actual anti-Nazi demonstration at the Skokie Village Hall on Monday, but in reality it was merely local residents who portrayed crowd "extras" for the filming of the CBS-TV movie, "Skokie." Filming began in and around the village hall early Monday morning and continued through Wednesday. For more pictures see page 46. (Photo by Jennifer Waters)

DESPITE THE first real signs of a cold, biting winter Monday, local residents marched into the parking lot of the Skokie Village Hall as crowd "extras" for filming of the CBS-TV movie, "Skokie." The fake protesting had some real life touches with yelling and screaming heard among the crowds. Pictured (left) the "crowd" not only consisted of the paid extras, but some residents who wandered by in hopes of getting a chance to make their screen debut.

And as if the additional people didn't create enough havoc on the village hall grounds, film crews were yelling and signaling back and forth through walkie-talkies, bull horns and hand motions. Skokie Police Officers Robert Weick (bottom left) and Rusty Quante were among those providing "security" for the village hall; and (bottom right) Skokie resident Helen Jacobs hides her fingers from the cold as she displays the sign she carried for her part in "Skokie."
