SKOKIE'S 1977-78 tussle with a group of South Side Nazis and a look at the CBS movie made to retell that incident could be found at local checkout counters everywhere this week—in the current edition of TV Guide.

TV Guide's story, "Making 'Skokie': The Passions Came Flooding Back," took an insider's look at the production of the 2½-hour drama, scheduled to be telecast at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday, Nov. 17, on WBBM-

Those locals who got to appear on camera (and certainly in the TV Guide) have become celebrities of a sort. Nancy Scott of Skokie, who appeared in several shooting sequences, says she can relate to the fame enjoyed by film stars.

"I can go anywhere in Skokie and people stop me," Scott said.

Flipping to page 37 in TV Guide, there is a second picture showing Danny Kaye as a Holocaust survivor who protests the proposed Nazi march in a synagogue scene. Readers who have the magazine and turn to that page can spot Larry Briskin (with beard) on the left side behind Kaye.

Scott said there will be plenty of videotape machines rolling when the film airs next month.
