On Friday evening, February the 16th, the girls of Central College entertained in honor of the Missouri Wesleyan and Howard-Payne basket ball teams in the society halls of Central. They showed themselves proficient in the art of entertaining and the evening was a very delightful one. In spite of the fact that the two preceding games afforded such unhappy results, everyone was in high spirits and the time seemed exceedingly short. Punch was served.

February the 7th was the anniversary of the birth of Charles Dickens. In view of this fact our chapel exercises of that week were devoted to this famous novelist. Each morning a paper on some phase of Dickens' life or works was read by one of the girls and the oratory pupils gave readings from some of his most noted works. Dickens is one of the greatest of English authors and the time we devoted to him was very instructive and enjoyable.

What is life? Is it something so disagreeable, then, that we rush through it as if driven by a whirlwind? Each day finds us hurrying faster and faster through youth and middle age, then as we come to old age, pausing for a moment perhaps, before leaving it forever. Why not stop once in awhile in the midst of life and enjoy it, especially in this age when we have so many real pleasures and blessings. Each age is better than the preceding one, yet each age finds us in a bigger hurry to get through with it. We have so many advantages now over the people of other days. We are endowed with so much beautiful poetry and elevating truths which we have received as an heritage from our forefathers. What a sad thing it must have been to have lived in those times when the people had no sure belief in immortality. Life must then have been dreary indeed, but we have had that idea worked out for us. Man is never satisfied with his lot, but is always searching for some higher, nobler truths. So we have left to us such gems as the following by an obscure poet, but nevertheless a beautiful thought:

"Life! I know not what thou art,
But know that thou and I must part;
And when, or how, or where we met
I own to me's a secret yet.

"Life! we've been long together,
Through pleasant and through cloudy weather;
'Tis hard to part when friends are dear,
Perhaps 'twill cost a sigh, a tear;
Then steal away, give little warning,
Choose thine own time;
Say not good-night, but in some brighter clime
Bid me good morning."

Among some of the good college papers we have received are the Drury Mirror Normal Student, William Jewell Student and the Central Wesleyan Star. There are many commendable things found in the various papers and are worthy of mention. We believe however that the best way to improve our college papers since we are more or less judged by our publications is to have the best possible material. We are compelled to have some
