

1960's

PROPOSED MODEL--DEMONSTRATION POLICY

Guaranteeing the rights of free speech and peaceable assembly ~~are~~^{are} basic requirements for any academic community. The campus is open to speakers whom members of the college wish to hear and to representatives of organizations in whom members of the college have an interest. In addition, expressions of support or protest by members of the campus community which do not infringe upon the rights of others are encouraged.

To protect the community and individuals from any infringement, the college(s) prohibit(s) disruptive or non-peaceful actions or participation in a disruptive or non-peaceful demonstration on any of the grounds of the Claremont Colleges and affiliated institutions.

Decisions as to when an action is non-peaceful or disruptive may be difficult, but the following general guidelines can be given:

Non-peaceful actions include those actions which endanger or injure, or are threats to endanger or injure, any person or property.

Disruptive actions are those in which there is a deliberate disruption of or an impedance of access to regular activities of the college or of the college community, including as well, those which restrict free movement on the campus.

If people in a given area are told by a member of the college community that their collective actions are judged non-peaceful or disruptive at that time, individuals remaining or subsequently joining those in the area specified may be charged by the member of the community with a violation of this policy.

Any individual alleged to be acting in a non-peaceful or disruptive manner, whether he or she is acting individually or within a group, may be charged on the basis of the individual's behavior or of the collective behavior, with a violation of this policy. Charges may be brought in writing by any individual to the appropriate judiciary body.

In an emergency situation, any President or a designated representative is empowered by the Boards of Trustees to take appropriate action including ^{suspension} suspension from the college. Any such action taken would be temporary, pending disposition of the matter by the regular judicial process.