The house at 32 Forrester Street was constructed in 1884 in the Queen Anne style.¹ Queen Anne architecture reached the peak of its popularity between 1880 and 1900 and is known for its highly decorative accents, wrap-around porches, and asymmetry. This style appears throughout Salem but is most densely seen on Boardman and Lafayette streets.

Until the late 19th century, Forrester Street extended from 20 Essex Street through what is now known as Washington Square South. The land that now connects Forrester Street to Webb Street, like much of the surrounding area, was previously industrial. The area was filled in around 1872 and steadily transitioned to residential property until 1910. The neighborhood was highly sought after for its proximity to Salem's downtown and the city's industrial and maritime industries.

The house at 32 Forrester Street sits on land that previously extended from Essex Street, belonging to William W. Kelman. (1828-1896)² Kelman's home fronted Essex Street at number 28, but his land encompassed what is now three lots on Forrester Street. ³ Kelman purchased the land in 1870 for one thousand dollars from Hephsibeth Kelman, who appears to be his widowed, paternal grandmother. ⁴ In the 1874 Salem Directory William's father, John H. Kelman (a mariner) and his grandmother, Mrs. John Kelman, (Hephsibeth) are listed at 28 Essex Street, with

² Also appears as Kellman and Kilman

William living on Bridge Street.⁵

Between 1855 and 1879, William, his wife Martha, son William Jr. (listed as a Harvard student), and daughter Nellie are recorded as owning over twenty investment properties in Salem and the surrounding towns. According to the Boston Globe, both William and his son William Jr. died under suspicious circumstances. William Jr. passing first, in 1877 and William Sr. in 1896.⁶

In 1864 William W. Kelman split his land between Essex and Forrester streets, transferring ownership of the parcel abutting Forrester Street to Daniel C. Manning, (1807-1882) while his parents remained on the Essex Street side. Manning was part-owner of Smith & Manning Co., a livery, which in 1866 had stables on Essex, Hamilton, and Washington Streets. Daniel C. Manning and his wife Louisa (Lucy) Massey lived at 62 Forrester Street (now Washington Square South) with their two daughters, Anna and Mary.

The Masury Family, 1884-1915

In June 1884 William Kelman sold the land now known as 32 Forrester Street to Lizzie W. (Marshall) Masury (c. 1856-1889) for five-hundred dollars. ⁹ The following January, Lizzie and her husband Samuel Frank Masury (1853-1919) applied for a mortgage of fifteen hundred dollars from Salem Savings Bank, this mortgage is the first mention of a "dwelling house" on the property. ¹⁰ The house would be known as 17 Forrester Street until the street was renumbered between 1894-1895. In 1886 the Masurys expanded their land by purchasing an additional plot from the estate of Daniel C. Manning for seven hundred dollars. ¹¹ It is thought that the Masury's discovered an issue with the land boundaries during the construction of the home, having to then appeal to both Manning and previous owner, Kelman, for deeds to the land.

Samuel Frank Masury, commonly known as S. Frank, was a tobacconist, as was his father Thomas and older brother John. ¹² In the second half of the 19th century, Masury & Co. cigar shops are listed in multiple locations in Salem including, Essex Street, St. Peters Street, Washington Street, and Cabot Street in Beverly. ¹³

In June 1889, Lizzie Masury passed away at the age of 32. No details of her death are known, but a will was submitted in probate, in her name, the previous July, implying she may have been ill for some time. In February 1891, S. Frank married Ruth Jewett Mackenzie, (c. 1861-1933) a clerk from Essex, Massachusetts. ¹⁴ The two had a daughter, Pauline Baldwin Masury, in 1893. In 1895 the family relocated to Poplar Street in Danvers, renting the Forrester Street home. ¹⁵ The Masury's returned to 32 Forrester Street in 1908 and remained until July 1915 when the house was sold to Mrs. Daisy E. Jackman. ¹⁶

The Jackman Family, 1915-1916

Daisy E. (Hill) Jackman (c. 1878 – 1955) was born in Amherst, Nova Scotia in 1878 and immigrated to America in 1888. On June 8, 1896, while working as a nurse, she married Arthur Everette Jackman, an electrician from Peabody. ¹⁷ Around 1899 the couple welcomed their first child, a daughter, Ruth. By 1901 the couple moved from Peabody to 27 Warren Street in Salem, where Arthur worked as an electrician and substitute letter carrier. ¹⁸ From here it is unclear what happens to Arthur Jackson. The 1903 Salem Directory, states that he had moved to Pittsburg Pennsylvania. It is possible that Daisy and Ruth followed. In 1905, their second daughter Pauline was born, her birthplace is listed as Connecticut. The Jackman family reappears in Salem in the 1910 Census, renting a home on Boardman Street. Pauline does not appear in this record, but Daisy is listed as a mother of two. The following year, Daisy appears in the Salem Directory, implying that Arthur was no longer head of household. Daisy remains on Boardman Street until July 1915, when she purchased 32 Forrester from Ruth Masury. On the deed, Daisy is listed as "having no husband." Less than a year later Daisy sold the home to Mary and Frank Wright but continued to live there, with the Wright family, until 1918 when she married Silas Boyce, who lived on Bridge Street. The new couple welcomed a daughter, Alice, the following year.

The Wright Family, 1916-1931

Frank B. Wright (1843-1918) was born in Troy, New Hampshire in 1843 to inn-keepers, Solomon and Polina Wright. In January 1888, while working as a clerk at Central House, on Washington Street in Salem, Frank married Mary V. Keating, (1867-1927) a waitress, from Biddeford, Maine. The following year the couple had a daughter, Ethel, followed by another daughter, Marion, in 1892. By 1910, Frank B. Wright was the keeper of a boarding house at 19 Lynde Street before moving in with Daisy Jackman in 1916. Around 1918, Frank passed away, leaving Mary and their two daughters in the 32 Forrester Street home.

Over the next few years, the Wright family hosted boarders including Samuel Webb, (1858-1945) a widowed, clothing salesman. Samuel Webb was born the youngest of seven children belonging to Henry and Rebecca Webb.²¹ The family lived at 22 Hardy Street and Henry supported the family as a brick mason. Samuel lived with his family on Hardy Street until 1881, when he married Dolly Potter Ashby. (1857-1905) Two years later, Dolly gave birth to their only child, a son, Frank Randall Webb. (1883-1960)²² The Webb family lived at 8 Harmony Street in Salem until 1905 when Dolly died of tuberculosis.²³ Frank would soon marry, moving to Boston.

Samuel then lodged in various homes in Salem before boarding with Ethel and Marion Wright (1889-1964) at 32 Forrester Street. In 1931, The Wright daughters sold the home to Alice and Alphonse Bachorowski for $$4,500.^{24}$

The Bachorowski Family 1931-1985

Alphonse Sylvester Bachorowski (1898-1972) was born in New Jersey to Maryanna and Zygmunt (Zigmund) Bachorowski, Polish immigrants.²⁵ Around 1900, the family, of at least seven children, settled in Salem's Historic Derby Street Neighborhood, living on Herbert Street and later Hardy Street. In the early 20th century, Derby Street was a predominently Polish neighborhood. Attracted to job oppertunties in the city's mills and factories, Polish immigrants began arriving in Salem around 1890. This was true of Alphonse's father, Zigmund, who worked in a tannery as a morocco finisher. By 1911, Poles comprised about 8% of Salem's population.

By 1922 Alphonse had graduated from St. John's Preparatory School and earned a law degree from Boston University. In 1926, Alphonse married Alice H. Kowalski. (1900-1995) In January 1931, an article by Alphonse titled "Seventy years in Salem" was published in Poland magazine, discussing the history of Poles in Salem. Around this same time Alphonse presented his research at Salem's Essex Institute.²⁶ That same year, Alphonse and Alice purchased the home at 32 Forrester Street. ²⁷

The couple had two children, Joseph Alphonse and Albert Leon. The Bachorowskis remained in the home for several decades. After Alphonse passed away in 1972, Alice continued to reside in the home for another thirteen years. In 1985 she sold the home John and Kim Masiz for $135,000.²⁸

LITTLE DONE IN LEAROYD CASE.

Detectives Working on the Salem End of It, Apparently.

DANVERS, Nov 13-This has been another quiet day in the Learoyd polsoning case. None of the detectives have been seen in town, and if they have been here they kept their presence a profound secret. Chief Bacon when profound secret. Chief Bacon when asked by The Globe's correspondent where the detectives were going today stated that he did not know. It is pre-burned that they are still in conference with Dist Atty White in Salem.

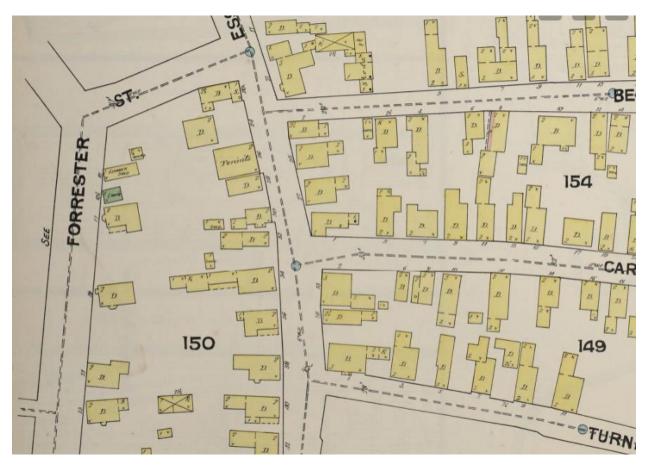

An about rumor was started today to the effect that the late William W. Kelman lost his life by poisoning at the hands of William Kennedy, who was elieged to have had a grievance against him. This report was promptly denied. Mr Kelman d.ed somewhat unexpectedly, although it was known that he could not live, as he had brights disease with not live, as he had brights d'sease, with complications.

Frank Kimball, brother of the late Sylvester Kimball, has been in Wakefield, N 11, to attend the disinterring of his brother's body, but as the officers were not on hand he was obliged to lea ve.
