History of the structures (The Ropes-Waldo Estate, consisting of the present-day 124 and 124 1/2 Federal Street and One Lynn Street):

The early Federal house presently bearing the address 124 Federal Street was built in 1784 for Salem merchant Jonathan Ropes on or near the "100 poles" of land bequeathed to him by his father, John Ropes, Jr., in 1754 along with "a mansion house, shop and barn". The younger Ropes made few changes to his estate until after 1780 when he tore down the "ancient" homestead and began acquiring adjoining northerly properties along the "new road" (Lynn Street) lately laid out by his neighbor Benjamin Goodhue. By 1783, he had consolidated the property on which he would construct his new house in the following year.<sup>1</sup>

Jonathan Ropes bequeathed his entire estate to his only grandchild, Jonathan Waldo, in 1799. Waldo's professional occupation was that of an apothecary, but he referred to and conducted himself primarily as a "merchant" and also had many part-time public pursuits. In the 1790s he served successively as a town official, major of the militia, and overseer of the repairs of Fort Pickering. Several years after receiving his inheritance, Waldo increased the assessed value of the Federal Street house by either erecting or extending the rear ell along Lynn Street in order to open a shop. In their valuations of 1807-1810, Salem's tax assessors indicate quite clearly that Waldo's new shop is located in his house, not adjacent to it. In 1810-1811, Waldo was assessed for an additional store, referred to as "a brick store" in mortgage deeds of 1811, 1813, and 1818. Presumably this structure is the present-day One Lynn Street, possibly built by Waldo's neighbor Nathaniel Chamberlain, a noted Salem bricklayer.<sup>2</sup>

After the death of Jonathan Waldo in 1817, his heirs bequeathed the entire estate, referred to as "a certain messuage consisting of a dwelling house and the land under and adjoining and the brick store and all other buildings thereon, bounding southerly on Federal Street seventy-eight feet more or less, easterly on Lynn Street one hundred and four feet more or less, northerly by land late of David Bancroft deceased about one hundred thirty-five feet, westerly partly by land of Ebenezer Shillaber deceased and partly by land of Nathaniel Chamberlain about one hundred and eighty feet or however otherwise bounded or reputed to be bounded" to John Holman of Salem, a mariner, who occupied the house until 1830 and owned the property until 1832. In the early 1830s, Holman appears to have removed both himself and his business from Salem to New York, and consequently he conveyed "a certain messuage consisting of a wooden dwelling house and Brick House and barn and land under and adjoining the same....situated at the corner of Federal Street and Lynn Street" to the Reverend John Brazer, pastor of the North Church, in 1832.<sup>3</sup>

John Brazer and his large family owned and occupied 124 Federal Street, then designated alternatively 50 or 52 Federal Street, until the Reverend's death in 1845. Based on the tax assessments, there were no changes made to the existing structures of the estate during this time. The following year, Brazer's heirs transferred the property to Thomas Perkins of Salem, a relatively wealthy shipmaster and merchant.<sup>4</sup>

It is during Thomas Perkins' possession of 124 Federal Street (1846-1876) that the present-day One Lynn Street, the brick house adjoined to the wooden rear ell of the dwelling house on Federal Street, is officially listed as a separate structure in the Salem Tax Valuations. There is no evidence, however, that the brick building (with no address) was used as residence but rather as a warehouse or store for storage and/or display of Perkins' substantial goods in stock. The structure was certainly embellished during this period, as its assessed value increases considerably, as does that of the main house. Perkins likely added the Greek Revival entrances and bay windows to both structures at different periods in his thirty-year occupation.<sup>5</sup>

The west wing of 124 Federal Street, or 124 1/2 Federal Street, was built after the Perkins heirs conveyed the property to Benjamin Shreve in 1876. Shreve, "importer of French goods, watches, and jewelry" and founder of Shreve, Crump & Low in Boston, purchased the Perkins estate as an addition to his many rental properties in Salem. The first tenant of 124 1/2 Federal Street, Samuel Pitman, a currier, appears in the 1878 Salem Directory. In that same year, Franklin Tyler, a "morocco dresser" is listed as living in the house on "Lynn near Federal" and William H. Carter, an importer of wines in Boston, takes up residence in 124 Federal Street shortly thereafter.<sup>6</sup>

124 and 124 1/2 Federal Street and One Lynn Street were occupied by a succession of tenants, both short-term and long-term, during the Shreve family's ownership (1876-1929). The main house's occupant of longest duration was Frederick Broadhead, an insurance broker (1901-1917), while Frank A. Laws, a professor at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, lived in the addition from 1907 until 1920. One Lynn Street appears to have been leased by a succession of entrepreneurial spinsters, including Miss Eveline

Abell, an accountant and principal of the Essex Business School, and "Mademoiselle" Victorine Manassa, a milliner. In 1929, the trustees of Benjamin Shreve's estate conveyed "the property now numbered 124 and 124 1/2 Federal Street and Number One Lynn Street" to Rebecca Dembofsky of Salem, a mortgage broker and real estate agent who partitioned the estate and promptly sold off its component parts in the following year.<sup>7</sup>

Miss Elizabeth Balch, a descendant of the Perkins family, the occupant of One Lynn Street from 1920, and the operator of the "Old Salem Corner Studio" at Hamilton Hall, purchased Jonathan Waldo's brick store from Rebecca Dembofsky in 1930 and continued to occupy the property until 1952. In the 1950s, One Lynn Street was transferred to two short-term owners, Priscilla Belknap Moore of Salem and James E. Osgood of New York, New York. The latter owner conveyed the property to its present owners, James O'Shea, Jr. and Arlene R. O'Shea, in 1961.<sup>8</sup>

History of the property:

The land on which 124 and 124 1/2 Federal Street and One Lynn Street were eventually built was part of the original seventeenth-century land grant of Richard Bishop (d. 1674-75), which was conveyed successively to his son Thomas and grandson Richard

Bishop. Robert Kitchen purchased the Bishop property in the early 1690s, and quickly turned it over to Joseph Neal, one of the largest landowners in the neighborhood. Neal possessed the property, which adjoined his "mansion house" on the main street (Essex Street) for several years, after which it was transferred to the Ropes Family.<sup>9</sup>

The Ropes brothers, John Jr. and Samuel, built and possessed half-interests in a house and outlying buildings on their property, all of which was conveyed to Jonathan Ropes in 1754. After the laying out of Federal Street (after 1766) and Lynn Street (after 1780), Ropes greatly enlarged the property, probably with the aim of increasing its access to the North River. A representative purchase came in 1782, when Nathaniel Lang of Salem, a silversmith, conveyed to Jonathan "a certain piece of land adjoining a new road lately laid out by Benjamin Goodhue junior from the new street in said Salem so called down to the water side". Additional parcels of land (on the western side) were added to the property after the construction of the new Federal house in 1784 and its additions by both Ropes and his heir, Jonathan Waldo. There were few or no changes made to the property for most of the nineteenth century, until Benjamin Shreve added the circa 1877 addition to the main house. The division of the Ropes/Shreve estate came in 1930, when 124 and 124 1/2 Federal Street became legally separated from One
