investigating about some pigs she wished to buy.

Kaplan told many people that the murdered woman had expressed herself as being afraid of the two Poles and that she felt very uneasy Monday night when the two men were allowed to sleep in her house. He further said that while the two Poles had been employed by Mrs. Umansky picking berries last Summer they were inseparable and very gruff when anyone attempted to approach or speak to them.

It is known that Antone and Stefan spent much of their time in Westfield and Springfield. It was claimed that they stole a cow in Blandford and sold it in Westfield for $60. The money obtained by the sale was spent in "a good time."

Studley's Account of Capture.

Deputy Sheriff O. W. Studley, who was in charge of the party that surrounded the hut in Agawam, where the two suspects were, told the story this afternoon of how the Poles were captured. Before approaching the hut the officers secured the cooperation of Edward S. Wright and Dwight E. Bailey, two farmers with whom the two Poles were acquainted, and it was arranged that Wright and Bailey were to go ahead of the officers, entering the door first. It was believed that the Poles would offer no resistance to the two farmers and that their entrance into the house would pave the way for the arrest by the officers.

While Wright and Bailey approached the hut, the deputies concealed themselves in the rear of the barn, ready for a rush.

It was a daring undertaking for the two farmers, but they felt little fear because they knew the two Poles and had befriended them.

As soon as the door was opened to admit the two farmers the deputies forced their way in and pounced on the occupants of the hut.

Leyden Nabs His Man.

The Poles had been shooting promiscuously about in the woods in front of the hut, but when the farmers approached they were quiet and made no resistance. The larger of the two Poles, who are suspected of the crime, and a Pole, who occupies the hut, were caught by Deputies Studley and Wade, but the smaller of the two suspects escaped by running into the barn. Deputy Leyden followed after him and caught his man in the barn. A Smith & Wesson revolver with four cartridges was found in the barn near where the man was arrested.

Prisoners Write Their Names.

At the police station the two suspects were photographed for the rogues' gallery and Stephan, the larger of the two, admitted to the police that a picture that had appeared in the papers following the murder was his likeness. The other prisoner denied that a picture that had been given out by the family of the murdered woman was a likeness of himself. The larger of the two suspects wrote his name in the bertillon room as Stephan Ceborsky, and the other wrote his name as Joseph Zorofski. The two prisoners have said very little to the officers, although it is known that they talk some English.

The officers found very little money upon the persons of the two suspects and no checks or other papers likely to connect them with the crime.

The Pole, in whose hut the men were found, was brought to the Springfield police station at 2:15 o'clock this afternoon as an important witness in the case. It is understood that he has given the officers valuable information for the prosecution of the two defendants. No charges are made against him in any way, but it is stated that he knows a great deal about the case from conversation between the two suspects, when they slept at his hut two or three nights ago.
