

There were many American people there eating hot dogs and drinking coca-cola. I tasted these foods and I liked them. My American sponsor brought me to a church. The church was very different than my temple where I used to pray in Cambodia. The church had a cross and pictures of Christ on the windows and many seats. I wore my shoes into the church. In my Buddhist temple we don't have a cross, we have statues and pictures of Buddha and no seats. We take off our shoes when we go into the temple to pray. We kneel or sit on the floor. Now I have learned English and know all kinds of people and I am so happy to be in the United States. I have friends of many colors and we have a good time together.
