The girl's and boy's parents buy food for the wedding but the boy's parents buy more food.

We get married in the girl's house. Either my parents or her parents will marry us. If we want to let somebody to sing a song at the wedding we give them money.

A mat is put on the floor for a monk to sit on. Me and the bride will wear glowing, bright pantaloons. We have to let somebody dress us up. The children have to get out of the house and play outside. When the bride and groom are dressed they come out and sit down near the monk. The monk says a prayer to let us live together forever. It is a blessing the monk takes incense sticks and puts them in water. And then splashes water over the bride and grooms heads. We will sit on a chair and a singer dances around us making believe that they
