

Bristol has not always offered education for all of her citizens. However, an effort to offer education to blacks began soon after the close of the Civil War. In time, the effort resulted in the erection of the Bristol Normal Institute on McDowell Street in Bristol, Tenn. It was later called Slater High School. In 1955, a much larger building was erected on the site. It is now used for activities of the Slater Center.