

August 2, 1944

My Darling Wife

yes it certainly is my darling wife and I'm a proud fellow to be able to say so. I was ever so thrilled to talk to you last night honey. I sure must be more and more in love with you because talking to you last night made me happier than any other time I've talked to you.

So the girl I owed a kiss is running out on me to N.C. Well honey I'm thinking that I haven't lost much (as love I) all I ever want is to be able to kiss you. Will you promise that you will let me kiss you all I want to when I come home? Now honey watch what you promise because I really want to get you. Ha Ha.

Honey what do you have to have done to your teeth?

Say I really thought Marie's letter was nice. Gee I sure wish they would give him a break and send him home. Every time I'm about to complain about the army I do think of him and realize that he has the right to complain, not me. I should thank God for the grace he has given me by keeping me here in the states, you know honey Mario does mean alot to me. Now he's a great guy, I wonder if you could light a candle for him once in a while. I'm beginning to have lots of faith in the candles you do light so it may help bring Mario back safe and sound.

It seemed so strange to read Johnnie's letter and realize that he's overseas. It's really hard to believe. But honey please don't worry because I know that Johnnie will come home safe and sound and Roger to. We have to have faith honey. It means alot to have faith because that word can do alot.

you bet we will have a swell time when this war is over. Oh see just thinking about it makes me feel good.
A nice family, home and a car. Doesn't that sound swell baby. I know it hurts to see other young married couples buying as though every thing is just fine and dandy but darling we will have our chance some day and feel just the same if not better.

Well baby it's time to say good night and from now on there will be plenty of mail from me and carloads of love to you from

Your Loving Husband
Danny