

“Paul Tsongas has proved his capacity on the national level.”

“Tsongas . . . has developed an expertise in areas ranging from Africa to energy to urban policy and has demonstrated an ability to get things done for his constituency.”

Boston Globe editorial
September 7, 1978.

He's the Democrat for U.S. Senate who doesn't have to make promises. Because he's already built a solid record in Congress, making Washington work for Massachusetts.

New Energy. Paul wrote and passed seven energy amendments. The most important will spur development of a solar cell that turns sunlight into electricity. And he's led the fight for fair energy prices, and supports a plan to help the elderly pay high fuel bills.

Old Cities. Paul Tsongas wrote and passed the law creating America's first urban national park in Lowell, restoring historic mill buildings and the core of the city where our industrial revolution began. The park means $40 million, hundreds of jobs, and the rebirth of the city.

Eternal Taxes. Paul saved taxpayers $15 million by writing a reorganization plan that combined three federal agencies into one and eliminated wasteful duplication. He also voted for a $16 billion tax cut and co-sponsored tax reform legislation. A citizen's group rated Paul's record on taxes as the best of all Massachusetts members of Congress.

People. As a Congressman, Paul Tsongas has never forgotten where he comes from. Seventy-seven times over the last four years Paul has sat down and talked with people in town-meetings he's held throughout his district, listening to their concerns. And with a mobile van he's helped people with problems who couldn't come to his congressional office.

In the Senate, Paul wants to work for tax relief, a national energy policy, urban revitalization, and national health insurance. His record proves he's more than able to do the job—he'll be a leader.

Paul Tsongas has served in Congress since 1974. He's a former Lowell city councilor and reform county commissioner. A graduate of Dartmouth College and Yale Law School, Paul served in the Peace Corps in Ethiopia. He is 37 and married to Nicola Sauvage Tsongas. They have two children and live in Lowell.

Paul Tsongas Democrat U.S. Senate