One day in the near future
When you've made new friends
You'll wonder what happened
To your old ones.
You'll wonder who they are now
And where they've gone.
You'll be sad because
You may never know.

Kim Phillips

Thoughts of my childhood
Warm feet walking up a cool wall
Lying on my back

I know a place called Lullaby Mountain
And it's only a dream away
And I love to visit Lullaby Mountain
And that's where I wish I could stay

The Mountain sits there so very peaceful
Yet many people are there
The lives they live are very simple
All that they own is to share

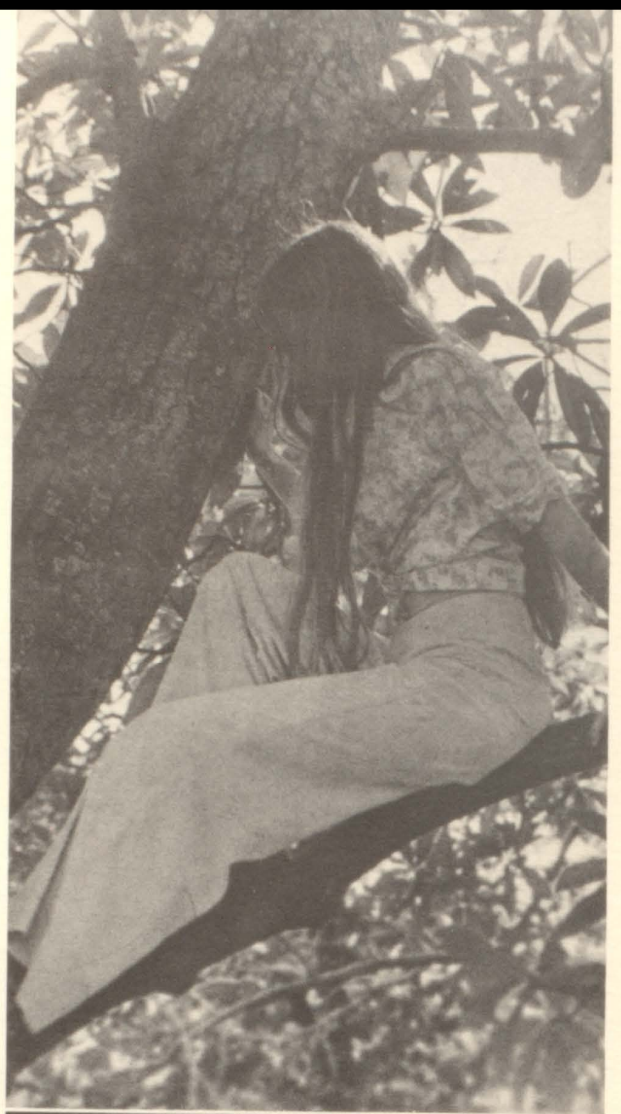

I love to walk on Lullaby Mountain
Yet I know that it's not what it seems
For although I love Lullaby Mountain
It's only there in my dreams

"Parable"

Shades of green stand out against the sky a brisk, chilling morning need not represent the coming day songbirds, in choral harmony as their homes are found morning flowers cost a beauty with the dawn only later yielding to our source of mightily piercing the horizon. A quiet lake, providing environment as the world for us, can be seen, but unclearly, through the morning mist lifting upward from the waters moving slowly towards the heavens in a vast field carpeted with grass, bowing quietly to the dew, I focus on a scene which brings happiness to me. This, at which I find myself unable to look away, represent, in my thoughts, our relationship, a view of two trees is apparent, but not without a special meaning one tree stands tall and brilliantly, but the other, through some course of nature, has found itself unable to survive in the world under its own ability. The tree had by some unknown miracle, in a loss of power, given way from it natural state. In its loss it had fallen against the other, thus finding a means of support. If it were to have been completely lost, that is crashed to the ground then its purpose would have no longer seemed sensible. With finding a support the purpose was maintained. Now you can see as I did that our names were written on the trees. They did not appear separately on the trees, but together on both. The names were able to appear brighter as a signifier of who in our relationship needed the most help at that time. No matter what happens there is a direction to take which will provide one with the greatest benefit. When the need to find support arises, and the direction taken gives you that support, then there is love. As the scene of the trees represent, follow the right path and you will get support and love. I feel we have followed our paths and love was found.
