Mr. Milton Fairchild, who has developed an ingenious system of character education which he calls "visual instruction in character," will address the members of the Congressional Club this afternoon.

By means of a remarkable camera, designed by himself, Mr. Fairchild has made a wonderful collection of photographs of things that really happen. These "reality" photographs will be used to illustrate the stereopticon lecture today. They include incidents in human affairs having problems of morality involved, boys fighting, decisive moments in sports, disputes, street accidents, and workshop requirements.

Invited to preside at the tea table at the conclusion of the lecture are Mrs. Henry Allen Cooper and Mrs. Royal C. Johnson.
