FAIRVIEW

Home of William Jennings Bryan

William Jennings Bryan was born in Salem, Illinois in 1860. He moved to Lincoln in 1887, entered into law practice and was elected to Congress in 1890. He won the first of three presidential nominations with his "Cross of Gold" speech at the Democratic National Convention in 1896. Fairview was built in 1901-1902 with the proceeds from his publications. Construction costs were more than $10,000.00.

Bryan visualized Fairview as a new Monticello and accepted the 1908 presidential nomination on the front steps of the home. Woodrow Wilson visited here during the 1912 campaign and a steady parade of political personalities came to consult with "The Great Commoner". Here he collected the mementos of his unsuccessful political campaigns and world tour of 1905.

Fairview was the scene of many lawn parties held by the Bryans for their friends. The surrounding fields were farmed until his watchful eye. Mrs. Bryan's health forced the family to leave Nebraska in 1917 after Bryan had served as President Wilson's Secretary of State. In 1922 Fairview was donated to Lincoln Methodist Hospital, now Bryan Memorial Hospital. William Jennings Bryan died in 1925 after the famous Scopes trial and is buried in Arlington National Cemetery.

YEARBOOK

THIS ANNUAL RESPECTFULLY DEDICATED TO OUR DIRECTORS
MISS BOVEE AND MISS GARRISON

A graduate of the Bryan School of Nursing, Phyllis Bovee, director of Nursing Education, began her career at Bryan as a general duty nurse. After a year in Omaha at the Nebraska Methodist Hospital, she returned to Bryan as medical-surgical instructor at the school. She was named assistant director of the school and in 1971 became director.

Bovee will complete her Master of Science degree in counseling and guidance at the University of Nebraska at Omaha this summer.
