The retirement on November 1 of J. Randolph Ruffin, director of Special Events for Colonial Williamsburg, and the appointment of Richard B. Sessoms as his successor was announced on Monday, September 16.

The change, which will be effective November 1, was announced by Donald J. Gonzales, CW vice president and director of Public Relations, under whom the Special Events Department functions as a key part of the Public Relations Division.

In his forthcoming post, Dick will maintain liaison with the Department of State on the visits of foreign dignitaries and head a more comprehensive approach in the field of Special Events. He will continue to handle general writing assignments, coordinate the overall lecture program, and assist with Public Relations matters.

Dick is a graduate of Hampden-Sydney College and was reared in Roanoke, Va. He is a former reporter for The Roanoke Times and later served as business manager of athletics and director of sports information for the Virginia Military Institute in Lexington.

Civic interests of Dick include the Williamsburg-James City County Chamber of Commerce, the Williamsburg Community Council, and the American Cancer Society, of which he is a board member of the local chapter. His professional affiliations include membership in the Public Relations Society of America.

Dick and his wife, the former Sarah Drake of Lexington, are members of Bruton Parish Church. They have two daughters.

AARFAC Show Features "Popular Art From Peru"

The Abby Aldrich Rockefeller Folk Art Collection is now featuring the Smithsonian Institution's traveling exhibition, "Popular Art From Peru." The show will continue through October 20.

The exhibition presents approximately 200 craft items selected by His Excellency Celso Pastor, Ambassador of Peru, for a first showing at the Pan American Union in Washington, D. C. The nation-wide tour under the auspices of the Smithsonian Institution Traveling Exhibition Service also is sponsored by the Embassy.

Composed entirely of contemporary works collected from ten different regions of Peru, the exhibition conveys the many formal traditions still alive in this many-faceted country: Terracotta figures from Cuzco; gourds, textiles, and retablos from Ayacucho and Lambayeque; ceramics from Puno; jewelry from Junin and Huancayo; cloths, spears, and gourds bearing the typical decorations of the Shipibo Indians of Loreto; silver, wrought iron, carved and gold-leafed frames from Lima, Cajamarca, and Ancash.

To this day folk art remains a strong and creative force in the culture of Peru. Textiles, ceramics, straw, and metal works are an enchanting realization of a people's instinctive desire to give beauty to their surroundings and to the objects of daily use. Stylistically these artifacts are descendants of the great tradition of pre-Columbian art, enriched by influences from Christian Spain.

Peru is justifiably proud of its

New Conference Center Auditorium Opens Here Late In September

CW's newest and most exciting visitor facility will open here late in September.

The new auditorium, adjoining the Williamsburg Lodge and Conference Center, will serve a dual function for Colonial Williamsburg. In the busy summer months it will be used as an auxiliary Information Center thus relieving the crowding that occurs at the Information Center. During the fall, winter, and spring seasons the auditorium will be used by visiting conference and seminar groups and for local functions.

The 482 seat auditorium is flanked by three galleries. The enclosed west gallery is designed to house exhibits. The open east gallery features a blue flagstone walk and brick arched arcade which continues the overall architectural design of the northern portion of the Conference Center. Here, as well as inside the entrance gallery, hang Copenhagen lanterns.

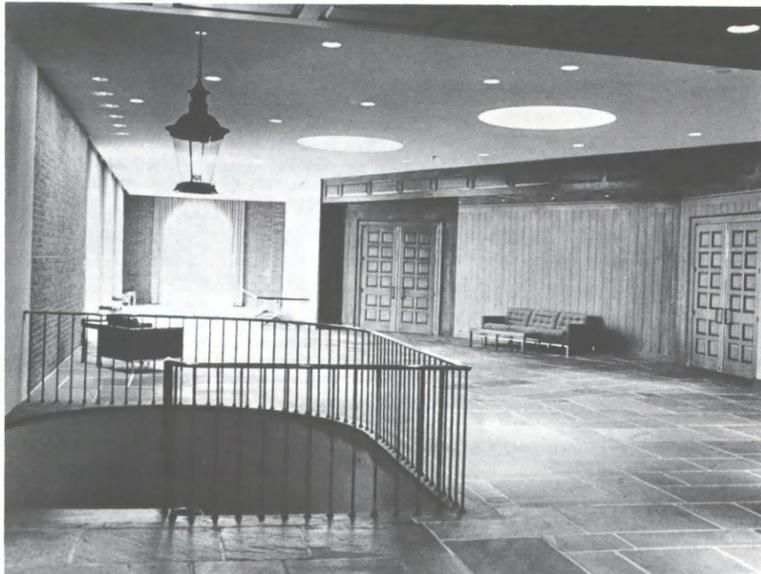

The entrance gallery, which continues without interruption into the north gallery of the Conference Center, is furnished to complement the decor of the northern end of the Conference Center. This entire area will be used for information desks and other visitor services during the summer months.

The handsome auditorium is decorated in various shades of blue for seats, curtains, and carpets. Retractable tablet arms at each seat provide each person with a convenient surface for note-taking. Woven, natural-colored reed sidewalks have been installed for acoustical reasons. A controllable sound absorbent curtain, located between these walls and the reflective outer side walls, permits acoustical adjustments to secure the desired sound qualities.

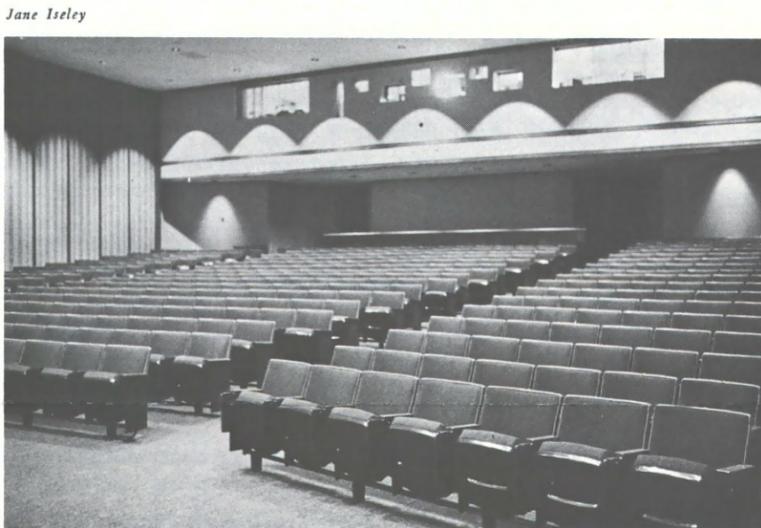

The large curved movie screen, which is the same type found at the Information Center, will be used for the showing of "Williamsburg - The Story of a Patriot" and other CW films. The stage is also equipped with an additional motorized ceiling mounted screen which is available for slide showing and similar presentations. Aisle microphones are also available for audience participation. In addition, a wide variety of lighting effects may be had in the event of live productions.

The auditorium's projection booth is complete with the newest audio-visual equipment and lighting controls. Three projectors have been installed here - two for the showing of "The Patriot" and other CW films, and one 16 mm projector. An all-purpose slide projector will be installed later this year.

David Warren Hardwick and Partners, Richmond, designers of The Motor House Terrace Wings and The Cascades Restaurant and Meeting Center, were architects for the auditorium. Construction was done by Taylor and Parrish, Contractors, also of Richmond. H. Chambers and Company of Baltimore were in charge of furnishings and decor. Frank La Grande of Sarasota, Florida, served as consultant in projection and optics. CW vice president, Charlie Hackett, served as owners representative, assisted by the Division of Architecture, Construction and Maintenance.

craftsmen whose techniques are handed down through centuries from father to son, thus keeping alive the traditional conventions of form and decoration. Their art is a true expression of the community's heritage, religion, and sense of identity.

Using materials immediately on hand, their imagination transforms wool and cotton rugs resplendent with vibrant colors especially attractive to modern eyes that are trained on abstract art. From clay they create heavily decorated miniature churches which are placed on rooftops of the villages of Ayacucho in the hopes that they may fend off evil spirits. The clay bulls of Pucara, painted in engobe

Spanish, too, are the angels, saints, and warriors of painted terracotta. Their delicate flesh tones and stylized mannerisms are reminiscent of the Spanish Baroque, and yet the figures are earth-bound, naive, and natural -- qualities that bring to mind the consistently creative force of the popular imagination that makes these objects true statements of the rich cultural heritage of Peru.

The Abby Aldrich Rockefeller Folk Art Collection is open every day to the public, free of charge. Hours are 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. Monday through Saturday, and on Sunday from 12 noon till 9 p.m.

After their performance, the colonial dancers invited the students to join them on the stage for the Virginia Reel. The festivities concluded about 10:00 p.m.

Roy Brown

The CWNEWS joins employees in extending sympathy to the family of employee Roy M. Brown, who died Thursday, September 5, in Williamsburg Community Hospital after a long illness.

Roy had been employed here for seventeen years, first as a carpenter in the Division of Architecture, Construction and Maintenance and, since 1966, as a journeyman cabinetmaker in the Craft Shops Department.

He is survived by his wife, Elsie, two daughters, a son, three sisters, three brothers, and three grandchildren. His son-in-law, Gene Burleson, is superintendent of CW's Upholstery Shops.
