Bob Spurgeon, general sales manager for Merchandising, says that this year's special sale for employees will be bigger and better than ever.

To be held in the Conference Center North Ballroom, the event has been scheduled for Monday evening, October 28, from 7:00 to 9:00 p.m. All employees and members of their immediate families are invited to attend.

"As usual," said Bob, "we'll have quite a bit of brand new merchandise from the hotel gift shops, from the Publications Sales Desk, and from the Craft House on sale." In addition, items that have become shop worn during the year will be available at drastically reduced prices.

All sales will be final and items must be purchased with cash.

The Bond Referendum What It Means For Virginians

On November 5 Virginia voters will be marking ballots on two issues of major importance to the Commonwealth. Citizens will be voting for or against the issuance of the $67,230,000 Virginia Higher Education Institutions Bonds and for or against the $13,770,000 Bonds for Virginia Mental Hospitals and Institutions.

For local citizens, the passage of the bond issue will mean more than $8,102,000 in construction at the College of William and Mary and at Eastern State Hospital. This will result in increases in both employment and pay-rolls of these institutions.

Funds are included in the bond referendum for completion of a Physical Education Building at the College. Such a facility will seat 9,000 and is needed for large College functions. It will also serve the community as an arena with the capability of housing basketball, ice hockey, wintertime sports, variety and musical shows on a regular schedule. At present, no such facility exists.

Most important of all is the fact that the entire State is in need of additional facilities so that students who are now turned away can have the advantage of college experience. It is a known fact that one applicant in seven is now being turned away by State-supported four-year colleges. For these young Virginians bonds will make space by the addition of six new community colleges and by new building projects on present college campuses.

The passage of the bond issue will mean a new treatment center in Northern Virginia for 500 retarded children, and planning for a similar unit in Tidewater. It will provide needed new buildings at every mental hospital.

The passage of the bond issue does not mean a tax increase as many people are lead to believe. Bonds will be paid off from existing State sales taxes, income taxes, and other general taxation. The fact remains that unless the bond issue passes in November, Virginia eventually will have to build the very same buildings plus any similar new structures required, from general funds. This would mean either increased taxes or decreased state funds for public schools, local mental health clinics and other state services.

Bonds will not mean deficit spending. Deficit spending means spending more than your income without any provision for repayment and Virginia's Constitution specifically forbids this. Bonds will not violate sound fiscal policy. Authority to issue these bonds has been in Virginia's Constitution since 1928. Neither will it mean a constitutional change. The present Constitution provided this type of financing 40 years ago.

If the issue passes it will not mean more borrowing or unpaid debts. The $81,000,000 is all Virginia can borrow now under her Constitution. Bonds will be repaid in 20 years or less. A special item within the State Budget is set up for that purpose. As general obligations of the State, the bonds will have first claim on the State's general income.

In the 1960's and 1970's Virginia's public services must do two things at once. They must keep up with the State's own growth, and they must catch up with other states, especially those in the South. In spite of graduate incentive programs and scholarships, Virginia is barely holding her place of ninth among Southern states in the number of her graduate degrees awarded. Despite preventive care at twenty-six local mental clinics, our mental hospitals still must use buildings from seventy to more than a hundred years old. Only two of our mental hospital facilities are accredited, and these were only accredited this year.

Without bonds Virginia cannot lay the first brick at any mental hospital and she will continue to fall below our neighboring states in the important field of higher education.

These are just a few of the hard facts of the matter. These are indicative of the realities the people of Virginia must understand before they go into their polling booths on November 5. The bond issue is not a departure from principle and it is a matter of necessity.

AARFAC Show Features Works Of Pennsylvania Almshouse Painters

"Pennsylvania Almshouse Painters -- Charles Hofmann, John Rasmussen, and Louis Mader" is now being featured at the Abby Aldrich Rockefeller Folk Art Collection. The show will run through December 8.

This is the first exhibition devoted to this unique aspect of American landscape painting. Hofmann, Rasmussen, and Mader developed the subject during the last half of the nineteenth century when, at various times, they were inmates of the Berks County Almshouse at Reading, Pa.

More than thirty paintings, illustrating the distinctive style of each of the three artists, will be shown. Many works have been borrowed for the exhibition from private collectors as well as from the National Gallery of Art, Washington, D. C.; the Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York City; the New York State Historical Association, Cooperstown, N. Y.; the Historical Society of Berks County, Norristown, Pa.

It is difficult to comprehend the relationship between the paintings in this exhibition and the lives of these three painters. All were German immigrants and lived their final years in the Berks County Almshouse. Hofmann, the earliest of the painters, arrived in New York in 1860 at the age of forty and twelve years later became an inmate of the almshouse. For the following ten years he had no other home and died at the almshouse in 1882. It was during those years, when he was continuously re-admitted for intemperance, that he painted the majority of his works in this exhibition.

Presumably these men came to this country to find an opportunity to employ their talent. One can only surmise that disappointment led them to such unhappy endings. It appears that through their art they expressed their desire for an existence of order and serenity which, in fact, did not exist. The majority of the paintings are large, stylized landscapes depicting the almshouses of Berks, Montgomery, and Schuylkill counties. The colorful and precisely drawn architectural complexes of the almshouses are set in an idealized atmosphere populated by people the artists knew.

It is believed that Hofmann originated the compositions for the views of the almshouses that were later used as a source by both Rasmussen and Mader. Several paintings by these

"Brave Horse -- The Story Of Janus" CW's Newest Publication

"Brave Horse - The Story of Janus," newly published by Colonial Williamsburg, chronicles an eighteenth-century horse race with such accuracy that it should prove exciting and entertaining for many young readers, especially horse enthusiasts.

Written by Manly Wade Wellman with illustrations by Peter Burchard, the historical novel begins with Mordecai Booth's purchase of Janus, a lame, ten-year-old stallion. Mordecai and his young ward, Nick Forrest, bring Janus from England to the Booth plantation in Virginia, and begin the judicious treatment of the horse's lame shoulder which had cut short Janus's racing career. This constant care ultimately results in Janus's recovery.

A challenge is offered to Colonel William Byrd III for a match race between Janus and Byrd's horse, Valiant, on May 6, 1757. The excitement rises as the day of the race draws near and huge sums of money are wagered on the outcome.

Wellman has drawn an interesting story from the few historical facts which have survived the more than two hundred years since the horse race, and has knitted in his fiction to create a very believable and exciting tale.

Janus, in fact, won the race and lived to become the foundation sire of the American Quarter Horse, and the sire of the first family of sprinters in American turf history.

Young readers will delight in Peter Burchard's imaginative illustrations which capture all the excitement and drama of events told in the book. Burchard has previously illustrated Pirate Chase by Earl Schenck and

The Scarlet Badge by Wilma Pitchford Hays, both of which are CW publications.

"Brave Horse - The Story of Janus" is distributed nationally by Holt, Rinehart and Winston, Inc., for $3.95 per copy.
