

Shepard: Administration Building.

Watson: Yes, the administration building.

Sellers: With the fountain in front?

Watson: Yes.

Sellers: That's called Westcott now.

Watson: It wasn't Westcott then. It was just the administration building then.

Shepard: Didn't they have it down in the basement of Reynolds Hall some of the time?

Watson: I don't remember.

Shepard: We'd go down after dinner at night and they'd dance. The girls, you know, because there were no boys there. There was a piano there and somebody would play, and every night you could do that, except I don't think they did it on Sunday night. One night I was down at rec and some of the girls had dates and their dates came there with them. One of the boys started dancing with his date and the matron stepped up and said "Boys are not allowed to dance with girls on campus." So the boys had to dance with the boys and the girls had to dance with the girls.

Sellers: What time did you have to be in at night?

Shepard: You couldn't leave your room after ten o'clock.

Watson: Ten o'clock. That's what I was thinking, too, it was.

Sellers: Was it lights out, or did you just have to be in your room? Could you study in your room?

Shepard: Your lights had to be out.

Watson: Ten o'clock was lights out, and you had to be in your room at nine something.

Shepard: Well, they gave a warning, maybe at ten, and then you rushed down and brushed your teeth and everything, went down and went to the bathroom, but by ten thirty your lights all had to be out. If they caught you with your lights on, you were campused. Or if you left your room.

Sellers: How did you get campused? Did you have to go before Judiciary?

Watson: The proctor reported you. They had a proctor on each hall.

Shepard: Yes, each hall had a proctor, and she had to report anybody who was out of her room.

Sellers: Was she an upperclassman?

Watson: In our case, she was an upperclassman.

Shepard: I don't remember. But you had to stay in your room for an hour and then you could go down to the bathroom after an hour was up.

Sellers: Were the regulations a lot stricter than what you were used to at home?

Shepard: Yes.

Sellers: How did you feel about them?

Watson: We sort of accepted them, I think. Don't you, Katherine? That part of being at college.

Shepard: Well, there were no boys there...

Watson: No boys anyway ... about the main thing you did was go to the show, the movies.

Shepard: If you went uptown ... even in the daytime until you were upperclassmen, didn't there have to be somebody with you when you went uptown?

Watson: I don't remember that.

Shepard: I remember there was something ... there had to be two of you. It didn't have to be an upperclassman, but you couldn't go alone. Well, forget it, because I can't remember.

Sellers: When you went into town, what did you go for?

Watson: To shop or go to a show.

Sellers: Where could you shop?

Watson: There was a general merchandise store right there on the main street.

Shepard: It must have been almost a mile down to the shopping center, wasn't it?

Watson: It was down one hill and up the other.

Sellers: Was there a drugstore with a fountain, or some place you would go to get a Coke?
