Some may wish you free from care,
Others joy and wealth.

Some may wish you blessings rare,
Long life, and perfect health.

My wish for you is greater far,

I have all the rest have given.

That when you from this world depart
Your soul will rest in Heaven.

Perhaps he'd chase them out again to change you into me

The Why of her. Wisdom.

There was a lass in our town,
And she was wondrous wise:
When knee-high skirts became the rage,
She held no young man's eyes.
She still wore skirts that touched her toes

All marked the modest miss!

But I recall when she was small,
Her legs looked just like this (). (P.L.)

And to all that's here

With in another year,

Some may be in No

The long road wants to take me far away,
From all I ever counted kind & dear.
And I must travel many a lonely day
With you not near.

Yet though the day be difficult and long.

I will walk steady as the path apart
Marching to strains of your

The man who hesitates is lost,
So stick it,
You have a chance, so make the most,
Still stick it,
So persevere & you'll succeed,
Determinations all you need,
Your highest hopes you then succeed
So Stick it.

Dedicated to Sister Milne in remembrance of her kindnesses.

Wrapped in her robe of amethyst

Rose the young dawn;

Pallid with passion came the mist

And followed on,

Fleet as a dawn,

Down by the sea, they clasped, and kissed.

Swooned the young dawn.

Out of that kiss of dew and flame

The orchid came.

In the South of England, you will find the following inscribed on a tombstone,

Stop thy foot, and cast an eye and view this place, were I do lie as though 'art now, so once was I,
Prepare thyself, to follow me.

Someone wrote the answer underneath
"So follow thee," I'll be quiet content
But am damned, if I know which ^{way} you went
