BCC HISTORY

The staff of the Tennessee Tech Minority Affairs Office housed in the Leona Lusk Officer Black Cultural Center, welcomes you.

The Black Cultural Center was established in 1989 as a place where African-American students could find support among their peers at Tennessee Tech. The center opened its doors officially in August 1990.

In 1964, Tennessee Technological University admitted its first black students. Before then, black residents of Middle Tennessee had only one choice if they wanted to attend a public university — Tennessee State University. They faced the economic and logistical obstacles of commuting to Nashville and beyond for higher education.

Recognizing those obstacles, Tennessee Tech students and a board of administrators and faculty chose to rename the university's Black Cultural Center in the spring of 1996 in honor of its first black alumnus, Leona Lusk Officer, who made numerous sacrifices to obtain something that many today take for granted. Officer earned her degree in elementary education, graduating in 1965.

The Leona Lusk Officer Black Cultural Center offers students an opportunity to learn more about African American culture through books, photographs and works of art. It is a place to expand a student's cultural awareness and knowledge; a place to relax, study, and have fellowship with friends; a place to keep abreast of African-American news via related periodicals. The Black Cultural Center sponsors various cultural, social, educational, and career-related activities to further expand the potential of future leaders.
