

---

THE distinguished services of Major Tilton in the Mexican War, where he is said to have "fought, bled," and almost died for his country, are urged by his friends, as strong reasons why he should go to Congress. This is saying no more for the Major than might be said of a score or so of officers in the rebel army, who also fought in Mexico, but who, turning traitors to their country since, more than cancelled every patriotic act of their lives.