

 The Puget Sound Herald comes to us "frighted to the guards" with the most villainous and licentious slanders and falsehoods upon the character of Mr. Garfield.

The vile creature that thus bedaubes the columns of this dingy sheet, offered his paper and himself, body and boots, to the service of Mr. Garfield in this campaign, for $300 cash. It is certainly a very fortunate thing that Mr. Garfield did not buy this man, and will prove equally unfortunate to the Republicans that they did so.

He says: "We know of nearly $1,000 yet due, and still in the hands of S. Garfield." You know of nothing of the kind—it is a falsehood.

Again he says: "Though he has a family with him, he does not possess a single article of household furniture, having boarded at a hotel during the temporary sojourn in the Territory." This whole story the editor knew to be utterly false from beginning to end when he penned it.

Mr. Garfield's family is now keeping house at Port Townsend, and in possession of the ordinary amount of "household furniture," has never "boarded at a hotel," except a short time previous to his removal to Port Townsend.

It is humiliating to be compelled to notice such vile, ribald, disgusting and libelous attacks. We forbear following this political vampire any further in his slimy trail of pot-house slander. "The dog has returned to his vomit again—and the sow to her wallowing in the mire."
