

Governments at War: The Art of Persuasion

Hawn Gallery

Hamon Arts Library

Central University Libraries

September 11-October 20, 2000

To commemorate Southern Methodist University's 75 year commitment to the U.S. Federal Depository Library Program, staff in the Central University Libraries are highlighting portions of the depository collection in an exhibit of vintage World War II posters, booklets, pamphlets, and ephemera.

On display are several posters produced by the British, Canadian, and United States governments. In addition, posters issued by the National Association of Manufacturers and the Czech resistance are being displayed. Pamphlets are official government publications issued through the U.S. Depository program.

We would like to offer our appreciation to Southern Methodist University Professor Tom Fomby for allowing us to display his father's flags.

VISIT US ONLINE

Government Publications
From World War II
A Central University
DIGITAL LIBRARY

www.smu.edu/cul/ww2

GOVERNMENT INFORMATION RESOURCES

www.smu.edu/cul/gir

75
United States
Depository
1925-2000

Southern Methodist University joined the Federal Depository Library Program in 1925. The Federal Depository Library Program originated in the early 1800's when a joint resolution of Congress directed that additional copies of the House and Senate Journals and other documents be printed and distributed to institutions outside the Federal establishment.

From that small beginning, the Federal Depository Library Program has grown into a system of close to 1,400 Federal depository libraries. Depository libraries are public, academic, or other types of libraries that are designated by Members of Congress or by law as official depositories. With few exceptions, congressional districts and territories of the United States have at least one Federal depository library.

These libraries serve as the primary source for Government information to the people of these areas. Local business people, researchers, students, and many other Americans depend on the Federal Depository Library Program for important Government information.

For more information, please contact:

Stephen Short

Government Information Librarian

sshort@mail.smu.edu

214.768.2561