It was his last day.
The last ride at the hour of the morning
Down these streets
For these particular reasons.
The last time he would pass
These particular buildings
Not noticing them
In his own particular way.
The night before was the last night
To be spent the way he spent it.
His morning thoughts
Would differ from now on,
His route would alter,
His daily routine would change,
As would his nights.
As he turned into the drive onto campus,
He thought he should be happy
That this was his last day,
But was troubled to find
Only one thought on his mind,
"What now?"

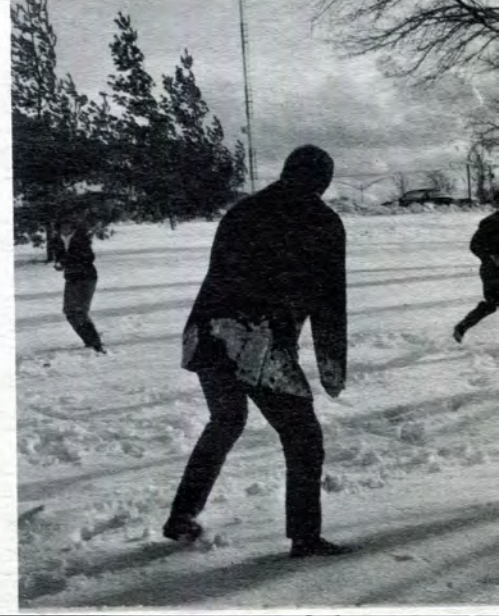

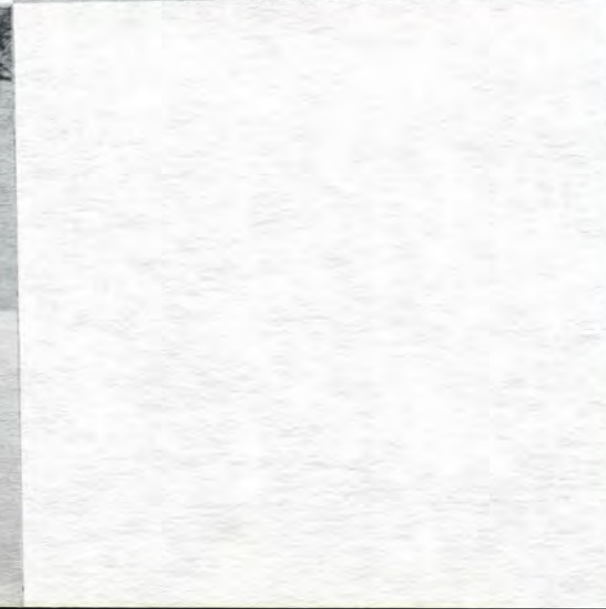

It was a light snow,
Just a few flakes here and there,
Only enough to freshen previous snows.
It might have gone unnoticed
Had someone not said,
"Let's have a snowball fight".
And so it was remembered
By those few
As a light snow,
Just a few flakes here and there,
Which had made it's mark upon their lives,
Then melted, evaporated, in time --
Much like man.

Once that summer

The child saw the sun

Cascade through the skies

And crash fiery into the waters of the lake,

As the water bubbled effervescently

And the waves clashed doubly strong

Against the long neglected rocks of the shore,

And night slammed its hand upon the earth

Without the gentle warning of dusk.

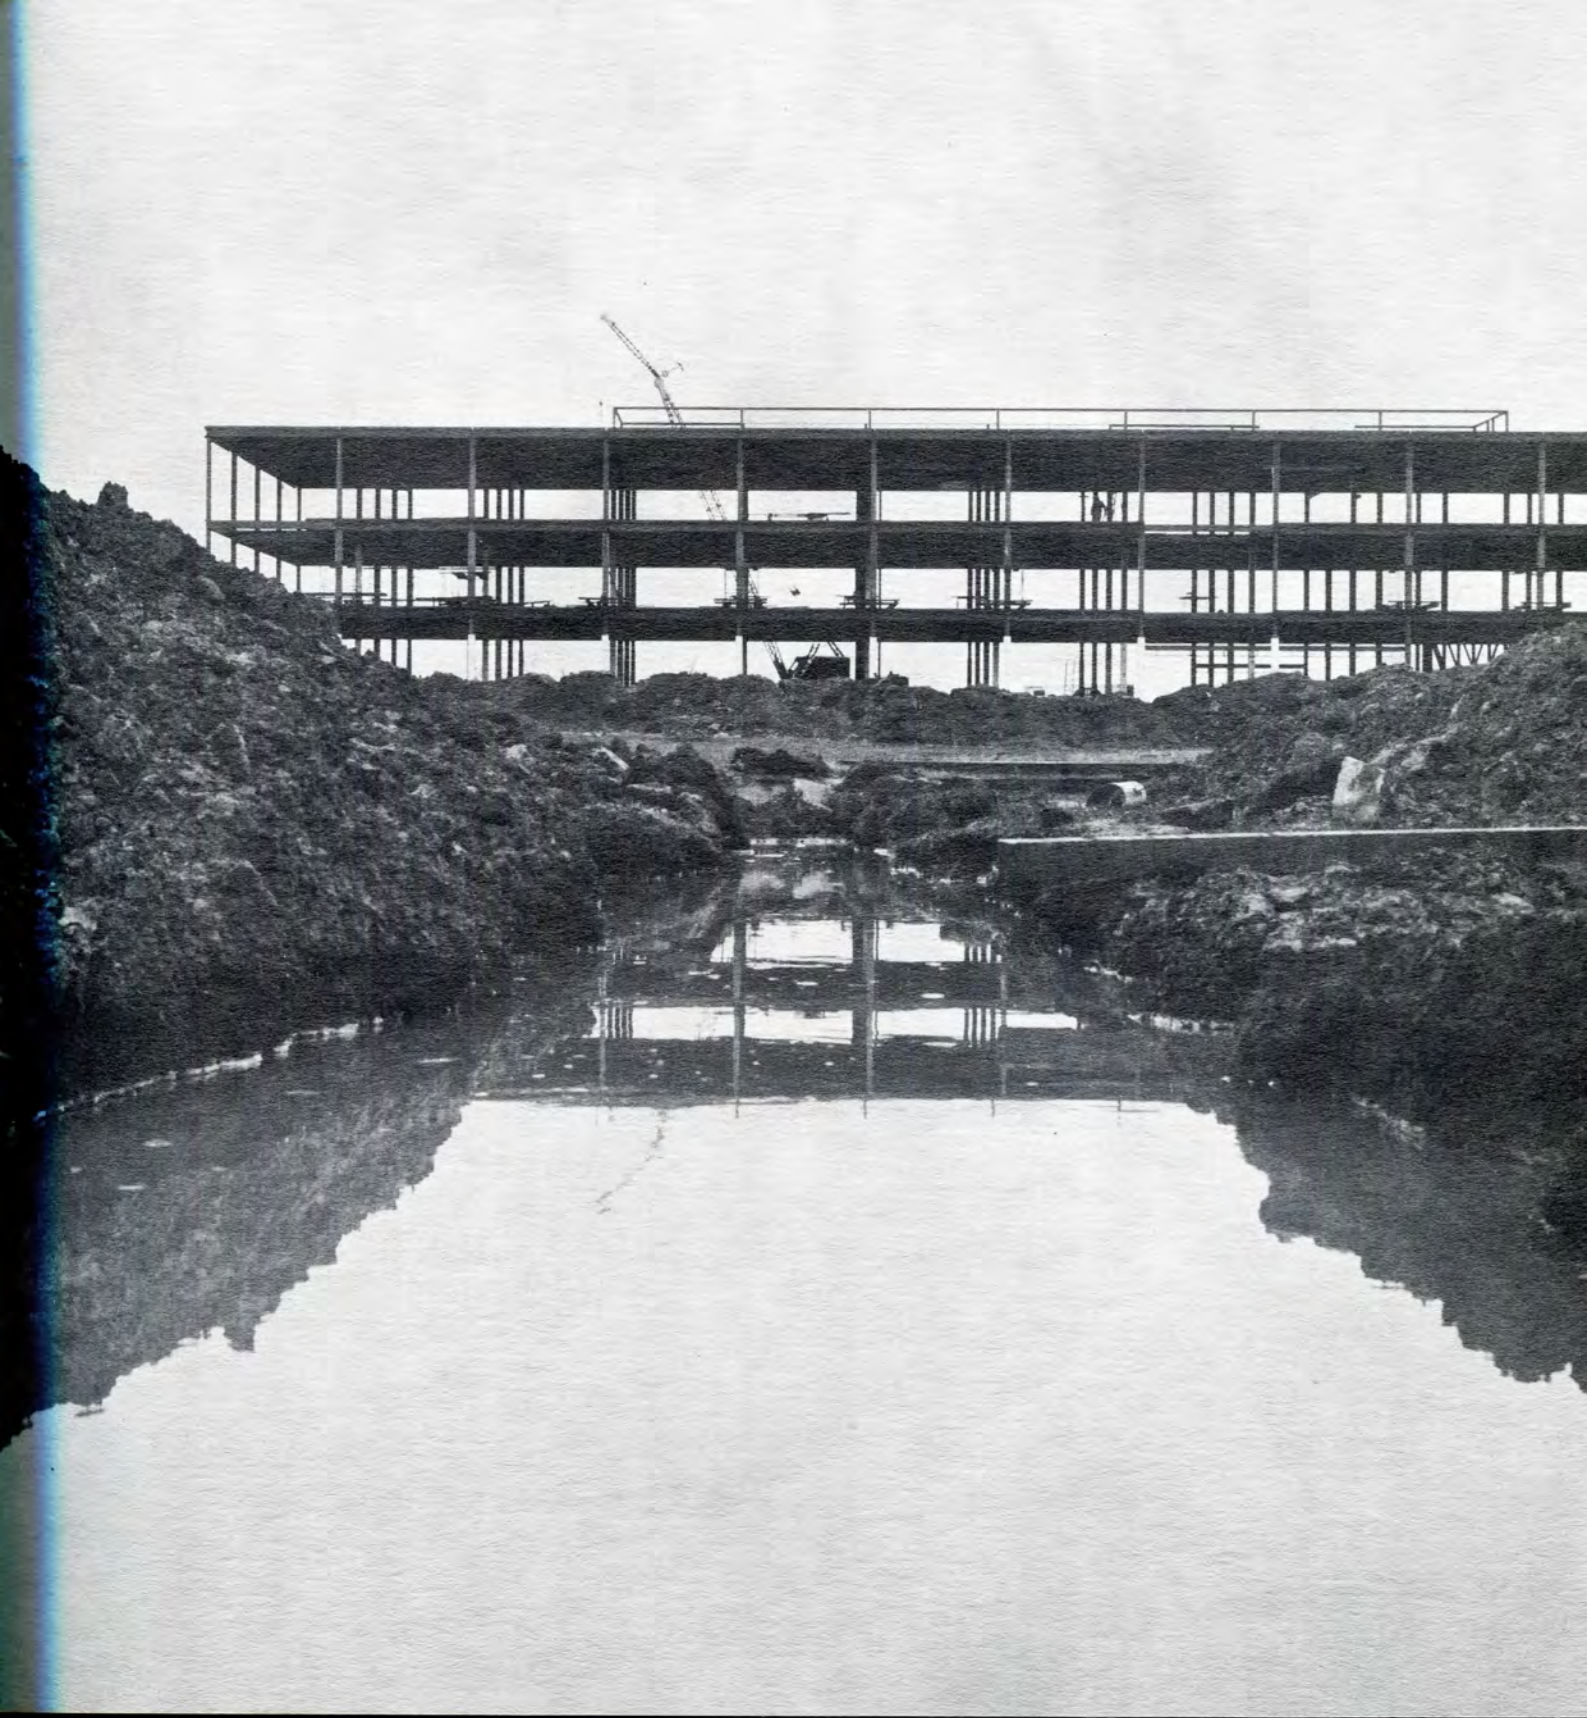

The child ran home and with excited joy

Portrayed the vision of his imaginative mind

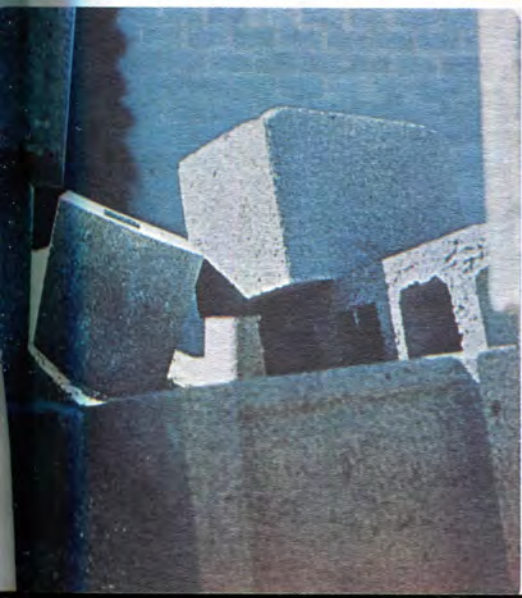

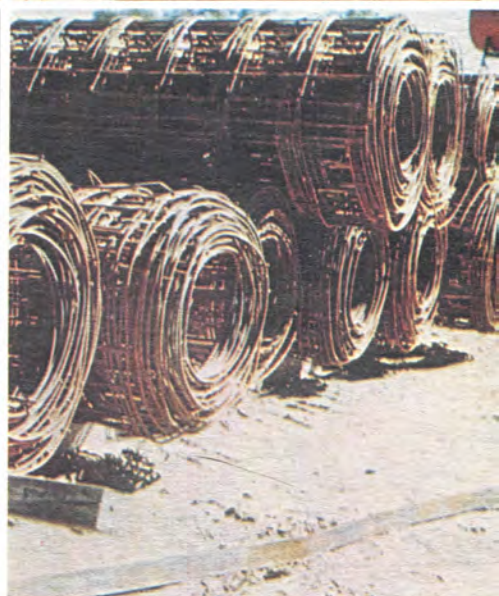

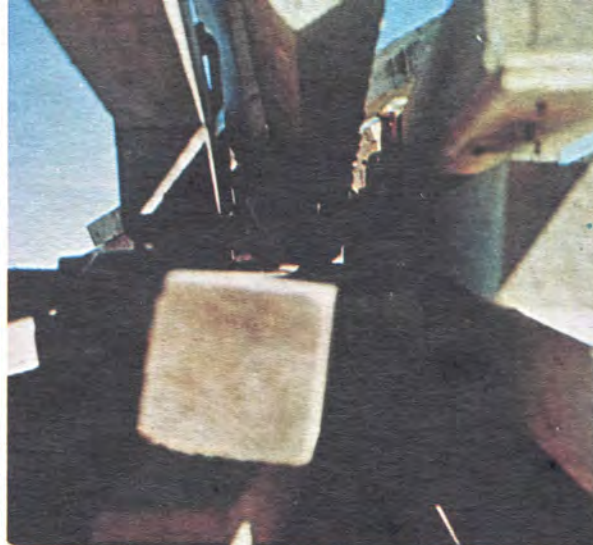

Only to be reprimanded -- told it could not be . . .

So, it had never happened,

Nor occurred again.

Months pass,
Seasons,
Suddenly a year.
Many moods,
Memories,
Thoughts.
Gone,
Another year.
What have I done,
Accomplished,
Between successive Septembers?
It went by so fast,
Another year.
It seemed that nothing had changed,
Life just went on.
Assignments somehow got finished
And others assigned.
Yet,
Something done the other year
Seems -- now -- so inadequate.
Somewhere
During the test cramming,
All nighters.
Homeworkless weekends,
Lunch hours and summer --
There was a definite change
For the better.
And it's only been
Another year.
