John Hardin of Kentucky

Page 426 of Daniel Boone and The Hunters of Kentucky (by Bogart, published in); In 1763, the father of the subject came to the Monongahela, a wild & exposed frontier post, a laborer. Martin Hardin, while risking the frontier in Fauquier County, was found within the limit of Pennsylv. after the boundary-line was surveyed, but he thought it in Virginia on the river bank. His son, John, became one of the noted hunters & held a military commission before the Revolution, as ensign in a company raised against a foray of the Indians. When just arrived of age, he volunteered under Capt. Zack Morgan (that skillful partisan officer of the Revolution) & was in the heat of the fight & here he got a bullet in his groin which was never extracted. With the aid of crutches, he continued to follow the army, but after this campaign of 1774, he renewed his hunting on the Monongahela, so he again renewed his fight for freedom, becoming second lieutenant. Serving under Horatio Gates, he took three British soldiers prisoners before they could realize he was alone. Refusing promotion as it meant a change of regiment but accepted the thanks of Gen. Gates with humility. In 1779, he left the army & started locating a home in Kentucky, removing there in 1786 to Washington County. Like all gallant Kentuckians, he followed the banner & shared the campaigns of Gen. George Rogers Clark & wherever his rifle might be or use there it was to be found. His home was raided often by the Indians & his cattle lifted. Selected by Wilkinson to make peace with them, he went to their camp near Fort Defiance, where they shot him to death in the zenith of his life although their guest. He was a member of the pioneer Methodist Church.

HARDING

Harding is a name of Gothic origin, in use at an early period in Scandinavia and Britain prior to the introduction of the ancient feudal system. Several bearing this name are mentioned in the Domesday Book in 1086. Burke in his General Armory gives no less than 15 distinct coats-of-arms by name of Hardin or Harding, several of which have simplicity enough to have been displayed in the Holy Wars, A. D. 1096-1291, when heraldry was in its infancy.

A Reverend Stephen Harding was rector of Trinity Church, Stratford-upon-Avon, at the time Shakespeare was buried, as is recorded upon a brass tablet in the Church.

The Harding family of Upcott, near Barnstable, had their seat at a very early period at Comb Martin, in Devonshire, and derive their descent from Fritz (son of) Harding. Of this family was the learned Theo. Harding, D.D., and probably Lady Gorgas, wife of Sir Robert, and not improbably the New England emigrant ancestors, no less than six of whom were in Massachusetts before 1650.

Abraham Harding, born in England, 1620, son of John, was living in Boston, Mass., 1640.

His grandson, Chester Harding, was a noted portrait painter; among his sitters were Presidents Madison, Monroe and John Quincy Adams.

A near relative, Stephen Harding, of Baintree, born 1624, was the ancestor of a line of men noted in the Wyoming Massacre and the Revolutionary War, and their descendants have attained eminence in the judicial and legislative history of the United States.

DeWitt, on the Hardings, Stephen Harding was b in Conn.
In 1723, in Amy Gardner (b 1725 in Conn. d 1803 in Exeter, Penna.)
had a son David who was about seven yrs. old at the time of the massacre, and two daughters. In 1799 David moved to Ontario Co. N. Y. and in 1832 moved to Indiana. Emily Bebe Roberts, 201 Hayden St. Sayre, Penna. In the massacre of Wyoming by Horace E. Hayden, pub. at Wilkesboro, in 1895. pp. 70-75 in a statement made by Elisha Harding to the Congressional Committee on Rev. Claims, Dec. 29, 1857, will be found a full account of the actions of Stephen Harding, Stephen Harding Jr. and several others of the name in and about the Jenkins Fort at the time of the Wyoming massacre. Stukely Harding was among those killed in the massacre and his name appears upon the Wyoming monument. Daniel B. Raymond, Trinity Building New York City. To this we add fuller extracts of the Harding Family taken from a book given me Charles A. Jenkins, Meshoppen, Penn. by his grandmother, Sabra Lydia Harding, Capt. Stephen Harding, son of Capt.
Stephen and Sarah (Wright) Harding, the immigrant, had command of Jenkins' fort in the Wyoming massacre
and in Amy Gardner of Gardner's Lake, New London, Conn. She was the dau. of Stephen Gardner of same place.
They settled at Colchester, Conn. ab 1750 where their ch.
were born. At 1774 they removed to the Wyoming valley and settled on the west bank of the Susquehanna in what is now Exeter, Luzerne Co. Penna. There he died Oct.
11, 1789, aged 66 yrs. His ch. were: Stephen, b 1749, d 1816 at Exeter; Thomas, b 1751, d 1813; Benjamin, b 1753, d June 30, 1778, being massacred with his brother, Stukely, who was b 1755; Micajah, Capt. b 1761, d 1845 in Sagrange Co.
Ind.; Elisha, b 1763, d 1839 (Mr. Jenkins' gr. gr. father) John, b 1765, d 1826; and Sam. b 1767, d 1825 at Ontario Co. N. Y.
There were also three daughters. Stephen, b 1749, m and lived at Exeter, Penna. He had only one son, David, who m (1) Abigail Humphrville and (2) Abigail (Brown) Hill, had fourteen ch. moved to Ontario Co. when the family did, and in 1832 to Ind. He was in the massacre with his two brothers, Benjamin and Stukely, but escaped.

Hearst's Sunday Atlanta American (?) of "SMITH, Answer to Query 416, H.S.G., October 12, 1930: It is a tradition that your John Medicus Smith was brother or nephew of my ancestor William Smith, of the same place; also a brother or nephew of Sandgrave Smith. The Smith genealogist does not think so. The old family papers were lost or burned when the family fled from Charleston to Columbia during the war between the States. I have the arms of William Smith, whose sister married William Hunter Torrance. They were my great grandparents. He was president of the Philharmonic Society - later called the St. Cecilia Ball Association. His first wife was Beta Roache, and their daughter, Sarah Elizabeth Torrance, was reared by her aunt, Mrs. William Smith, as her mother died when she was very young. He married a Bradlock, and had two daughters, Cornelia marrying a Watson and going to England, while Kelle married a Moody and had daughters who married a Chisolm, a Sinclair and a Pinkey. Sarah Elizabeth Torrance married James O'Reale, the adopted son of Dr. Elisha Pinnette, whose wife was an Emmette from Maryland, though born in Holland. Their daughter, Mary Blaiselle, married William David Hilliard. Their eldest daughter, Katharine Hilliard, married Charles William Beaufort, and I am their only child. I shall be glad to correspond to trace this line.
