John M. Thomas

A letter from Mrs. J.M. Aldrich (Eliza Allison Treadwell) of Michigan City, Miss., wanting information to fill out her Monroe line. The last wife of John Monroe was Sarah Danel whom he married in Rowan Co. N.C. on Jan. 25 1806. He was living in Rowan on March 14 1831 when he made his will--in that portion cut off into Davidson County. He willed to his widow, that portion of his homestead plantation described as being on the northwest side of the main road leading from what was generally called Dobson Cress road, to Wm. C. Beard's. His children were: 1 William (who died before 1831 leaving a daughter Pheby); 2 Abner; 3 Hugh; 4 Henry; 5 Elizabeth (who married James Stafford); 6 Pheby (who married William Markland); 7 Margaret (who married Williams) & by his last wife had 8 Abigail (who married John Thomas); 9 George Washington; 10 Lucy Wilkie (who married Francis Dunn Farabee) & 11 Randolph.

After the death of John Monroe, his widow, Sarah Danel & her four children moved to Miss. & the family got scattered. She, his son-in-law, John M. Thomas & William Bodenhamer were appointed executors--there was a relationship between her & William Bodenhamer whom she called "my son"--he may have been a step-son or grandson. The witnesses of the will were Hugh Delap & Ezekiel Brown. (Anderson & Tempe Delap of Memphis Tenn. spoke of our family as cousins).

John Monroe Farabee (son of Lucy) used a leather folding book during the Civil War which his mother's uncle, Samuel (who served in the American Revolution) gave him, while a son of Abigail Thomas says there was an "Uncle Tommy" on the mother's side--three of John & Sarah Monroe's grandsons were living in 1927 but two died the next year. There is said to be a family connection with President James Monroe--this can when proved carry the name through Virginia back to the eleventh century in Scotland.----- Marriage bonds in Rowan Co. The Annals of Haywood Co. N.C. (by W.C. Allen in 1935), page 623: "THE THOMAS FAMILY. More than a century and a quarter ago, a young couple, who had married a short time before in Virginia, came to the fertile and scenically beautiful Pigeon valley in what is now Haywood County. There they purchased lands and began the building of a home for themselves. They lived together in that new country for about two years when their brief union was tragically broken by the drowning in Pigeon river of the young husband.

"The actors in this tragic drama were Richard Thomas, who was born in Virginia, and Temperance Calvert, a descendant of one of the brothers of Lord Baltimore who had settled the Maryland colony in 1634. Only a few weeks intervened between the death of the father, Richard, until the birth of the son, William Holland, the third person in this singular story of the coming of the Thomases to Haywood County. Temperance Calvert Thomas was thus left in a strange and almost uninhabited country. Almost alone, except for a few settlers who were living in the valley far apart, this heroic woman was left desolate with an infant on her knee. She set herself to rearing her son and making a living upon the place her husband had begun. She, therefore, gave her son a good education, if it was "homespun," and at the same time managed the estate so well that a good living for both of them was made.

"This boy was the famous Colonel William H. Thomas, whose biography in full is given elsewhere in this volume. His career was long and eventful, one of the really great characters born and reared in Haywood County.

"He was married in 1858 to Sarah J. Love, oldest daughter of James R. Love, of Waynesville, and a granddaughter of Colonel Robert Love of Revolutionary fame. His home was in Jackson County on the Tuckaseegee river near the spot where General Griffith Rutherford routed the Cherokees in battle in 1776.

"Colonel Thomas left three heirs, as follows: William H. Thomas, Jr., who for many years was a resident of Jackson County; James R. Thomas, who has a home in Waynesville; and Sallie Love, who married Judge A.C. Avery, of Morganton. Colonel Thomas died in 1893."

Waighstill Avery, Signer of the Mecklenburg Declaration of Independence, Member of Colonial Congress & the First Attorney General of North Carolina.), married Feb. 27 1861, Susan W. (granddaughter of General Joseph Graham, great-granddaughter of two Signers of the Mecklenburg Declaration. Her father being Rev. R.H. Morrison.) & after her death, married Dec. 31, 1888, Miss Sallie Love (the daughter of Col. W.H. Thomas, of Jackson Co. N.C., a great-granddaughter of Col. Robert Love of Buncombe Co. N.C. *N.C. "JAMES R. Thomas, a son of Colonel William H. Thomas and Sarah Love Thomas, was born in Jackson County, December 16, 1860. The Thomas home, Stecoah, located near Whittier and Quallatown in the Indian Reservation, is a place of much interest.

"James R. Thomas was educated in the Waynesville schools and early turned his attention to politics. He was elected to the State Legislature from Jackson County in 1894 and served in the session of 1895. He retired at the end of his term.

"Coming to Waynesville in 1896, he early became interested in the affairs of the town. For two terms, he was a member of the board of aldermen, and, while a member in 1905, he was active in having Main Street paved with hard brick, the first street in Haywood County to be hard surfaced.

"In 1896, he married Josephine Smith, of Raleigh. They reared four children, Josephine, who married Odin Buel, of California; Sarah, who married R.R. Campbell, of Waynesville; Dorothy, who married J.F. Hodges, of Virginia; and James R., Jr."

Colonels John Thomas Sr. & Jr. Of Fair Forest, South Carolina.

Southern Presbyterian Leaders. (By Henry Alexander White) page 147: "in July, 1780, Captain Huck led his British cavalry into Bethesda congregation in York County, South Carolina. This, as we know, was one of the churches under the pastoral care of John Simpson. Hugh's men tried to frighten the women and children to make them tell where their husbands and fathers were hiding. Mary McClure, a young girl, mounted a horse and rode rapidly across the country to General Sumter's camp. There she told her brothers about the cruelty of Captain Huck. A force of about two hundred and sixty riflemen, most of them from John Simpson's two congregations, led by William Bratton, Edward Lacey, John McClure, Andrew Neil and McConnell, urged their horses through the forests and came upon Huck at Williamson's plantation. At early dawn on the morning of July 12, 1780, the crashing report of their rifles was heard in the British camp. Every bullet went straight to its mark. Huck was slain, his force was defeated and many of his men captured.

John Thomas was an elder of the Fairforest congregation in the present Spartanburg County, South Carolina. He was commander of the Spartanburg regiment. Colonel Thomas was captured by the British, but his son John became leader of that regiment. On that day after Huck's defeat, young Thomas and his Presbyterian riflemen defeated a force of British cavalry. At once, then, the men of all the Presbyterian congregations in upper South Carolina went out to fight. With their long black-barrelled rifles in their hands they rode away on horseback under the gallant Sumter to take part in the fight against Cornwallis."

History of South Carolina in The Revolution (McCrady) Vol. 1775-1780, page 608; "A singular exception to the general sentiment of the people in this section was a congregation of Presbyterians of the Fair Forest church, of which it was said that there was not a Tory among them. Of these Colonel John Thomas was one of the leaders. He was a native of Wales, but brought up in Chester County in Pennsylvania and removed to South Carolina. Before hostilities commenced he was residing upon Fair Forest Creek in the lower part of what is now Spartanburg County. He was one of the founders of the (over) church and a militia captain and magistrate under the Royal government. Having resigned his Majesty's commission, he was elected Colonel of the regiment in the place of Fletcher when that officer refused to join the new government. After the fall of Charleston he was, under Sir Henry Clinton's proclamation, thrown into confinement in violation of the parole he had given and the protection he had received. He had four sons in the rebel service, two of whom fell in the cause. John Thomas, Jr., succeeded his father in the command of the regiment and made his mark on many a well-fought field. The other son was a youth at the time of the war, but not too young to do some important service. He had also four daughters, each of whose husbands was a Whig and each ultimately held a commission in the field.

It happened that while Colonel John Thomas the elder, with two of his sons, was confined at Ninety-Six as a prisoner, Mrs. Thomas visited her husband and sons, and while there overheard two women in conversation, one remarking to the other, "On tomorrow the Loyalists intend to surprise the Rebels at Cedar Spring." This was a camp in which Colonel John Thomas, Jr., her son, was organizing a body to join Sumter at Clem's Creek. Startled at this information, as she had two sons as well as many of her friends and neighbors in that camp, which was but a few miles beyond her own home, Mrs. Thomas determined at once to return and apprise them of the intended attack. This was on the 12th of July, the night on which Huck's party was cut to pieces at Williamson's plantation in York. She started early the next morning, the 13th, and reached Cedar Spring that evening in time to give her friends warning of the impending danger.

Colonel John Thomas, Jr., the son of the heroine of this story and of Colonel John Thomas the prisoner, who had succeeded his father in command of the Fair Forest Whigs, now headed the small band of some sixty in number encamped at the Cedar Spring. On receiving the timely intelligence of the intended attack, Colonel Thomas and his men, after a brief consultation, retired to a distance in rear of their campfires, and awaited the impending onset. The British enemy, one hundred and fifty strong, soon made their appearance, and rushed upon the camp, where they expected to find the luck-less rebels profoundly enwrapped in slumber; but on the contrary they were wide awake

Col. John Thomas^{Sr. &} Jr. of Fair Forest, South Carolina and astonished their assailants with a volley of rifle balls. Several were slain and the rest routed. It was a short, quick, and decisive affair. It was fortunate for the Thomas party that the attack was made at night, as it prevented the enemy from discovering their own great superiority in numbers.¹ Reference 1 to King's Mountain and its Heroes (Draper), 73-75; Hist. Presbyterian Church (Howe), vol. I, 533-534.

Page 636; On the evening of the 7th of August Clarke and Shelby went into camp on Fair Forest Creek, nearly two miles west of Cedar Springs* "Before their retirement from their camp at Fair Forest the evening before, Josiah Culbertson--a son-in-law of Colonel John Thomas, Sr., who had, on a former occasion, shown great gallantry and determination, and who had recently joined Shelby--had obtained permission to return home two or three miles distant on Fair Forest Creek, charged, however, with the duty of making observation of any enemy he might find in that quarter. About daylight the next morning he rode fearlessly into the encampment he had left the evening before, supposing it still to be occupied by his friends, not knowing that they had retreated and that Dunlap had occupied it. But Culbertson was equal to the emergency. Quickly discovering his mistake, with extraordinary coolness and presence of mind he rode very leisurely out of the encampment, with his rifle resting on the pommel of his saddle before him. As he passed along, he observed the dragoons getting their horses in readiness and making other preparations, indicating an immediate renewal of their line of march. No particular notice was taken of him in the British camp, as it was supposed he was one of their own men. He quietly left the camp in this way, but when out of sight he dashed off with good speed in the direction he inferred that Clarke and Shelby had gone, and soon overtook his friends, and found they had chosen their ground and were prepared for the onslaught." Reference 1 Howe's Hist. Presbyterian Church, Vol. I

Among those who had taken protection, and were yet hurried off as prisoners to Ninety Six, was Colonel John Thomas, Sr., of the Fair Forest settlement, then quite advanced in life. His devoted wife rode nearly sixty miles to visit him, and convey to him such comforts as she had it in her power to bestow. While there, Mrs. Thomas overheard a conversation between some Tory women, of which her quick ear caught these ominous words: "The Loyalists intent, to-morrow night, to surprise the Rebels at Cedar Spring." This intelligence was enough to thrill a mother's heart, for Cedar Spring was but a few miles beyond her Fair Forest home, and with the Whig force were many of her friends and neighbors, and some even of her own children. No time was to be lost--she intuitively resolved to do her best to apprise them of the enemy's intention before the meditated blow could be struck. She started early the next morning, and reached Cedar Spring that evening in time to give them warning of the impending danger, when she quietly repaired to her home, conscious of having done her duty to her country, as well as performed an act of the noblest humanity."

"This was on the twelfth day of July. Colonel John Thomas, Jr., the son of our heroine, had succeeded his father in command of the Fair Forest regiment, and headed the small band, some sixty in number, now encamped at the Cedar Spring. Joseph McJunkin was one of the party. It seems to have been a camp formed for collecting the regiment, and drilling them, preparatory to joining Sumter. On receiving the timely intelligence of the intended British attack, Colonel Thomas and his men, after a brief consultation, retired a small distance in the rear of their camp fires, and awaited the impending onset. The enemy, one hundred and fifty strong, rushed upon the camp, where they expected to find the luckless Rebels profoundly enwrapped in slumber; but, on the contrary, they were wide awake. Several were slain, and the survivors scampered off badly demoralized. Among the slain was a Tory named John White, well known to Major McJunkin, and who, in the early part of the war, had declined bearing arms against the Indians, on the trumped plea of being a non-combatant.* It was fortunate for Thomas' party, that this was a night attack, as the enemy had no opportunity of discovering their decided superiority; and doubtless retired with the belief that the Americans must have numbered several hundred. This embodying of the friends of liberty in the Fair Forest settlement, probably hastened the movement of Ferguson to that quarter."

* * In crediting Mrs. Jane Thomas with this heroic act, we are aware that Mills, in his Statistics of South Carolina, has accorded it to Mrs. Mary Dillard; but the uniform testimony of the Thomas family, including Major McJunkin, who married a daughter of Colonel Thomas, gives the narrative as we have substantially related it. The occasion of her visit to Ninety Six, and residing in the neighborhood of Cedar Spring, go far to sustain this view of the matter. Mrs. Dillard, on the other hand, lived fully thirty miles south-east of Cedar Spring, and south of the Enoree river, in Lauren's District--and on the route Tarleton pursued when on his way to attack Sumter at Blackstock's on Tyger; and Tarleton relates, that "a woman on horseback had viewed the line of march from a wood, and, by a nearer road, have given intelligence" to Sumter. That woman was Mrs. Dillard."

Page 136: The marauder, Capt. Samuel Brown, a hardened wretch, "ventured, on one occasion, to the house of Josiah Culbertson, on Fair Forest, accompanied by a single associate named Butler, and inquired of Mrs. Culbertson for her husband. But this young woman, the daughter of the heroic Mrs. Colonel Thomas, gave him some pretty curt and unsatisfactory answers. Brown became very much provoked by this spirited woman, and retorted in much abusive and indecent language; assuring her, furthermore, that he would, in a few days, return with his company, lay her house in ashes, kill her husband, and plunder and murder the principal Whigs of the neighborhood. After a good deal of tongue lashing, and bravado of this character, Brown and Butler rode off, leaving Mrs. Culbertson to brood over her painful apprehensions.

"Brown's cup of iniquity was running over, and the day of retribution was at hand.

Prof. Ernest Merrill of Cullowhee, N.C. (author of the Merrill Family) setn me the Revolutionary War record of Daniel Merrill of Randolph Co. N.C. (brother of John & Benjamin who married Penelope); Dan Merrill married Elizabeth Lytle (1763-1810, daughter of Thomas Lytle) by whom had: Lytle Merrill (who married Mary or Polly, daughter of David Jones of Randolph Co)--the census of 1790 shows that Daniel Merrill also had three daughters in his family.

Daniel Merrill married Hannah Bishop on Dec. 21 1837 (it appears that he married twice between the above mentioned marriages)

Dan Merrill to Rachel Ward on June 20 1816 (she was born 1763 died Aug. 18 1817)

" " " Margaret Thomas Jan. 5 1818

Daniel Merrill who served in the Revolution & lived in Randolph Co. N.C., enlisted on July 22 1776 while a resident of Guilford (later Randolph), served as a private in Capt. Thomas Flack's Company of Col. James Martin's N.C. Regiment against the Indians & was discharged the latter part of Oct. 1776. He volunteered Sept. 15 1780 & served as a private in Capt.
John Johnson's Company of Col. Collier's N.C. Regiment. After the battle of Guilford the soldier was frequently called out on short tours by Capt. John Knight, against the Tories, on one of which tours his horse was shot under him, several bullets passing through his clothes, he was taken prisoner, treated with great cruelty, received a wound in the head from a broadsword from which he did not recover until after the end of the war. He served seven months in all, He was allowed a pension on his application executed Nov. 6 1832, while a resident of Randolph Co. N.C.

Daniel Merrill died March 11 1844, survived by a widow named Hannah (maiden name not stated & no details of marriage given) no reference to claim of children.
(In 1845, D.W.C. Johnson, of La Grange, N.C., stated that this soldier's widow, Hannah, was his aunt & that he had two others but didn't name them).

Hearst's Atlanta American of Oct. 1930, (in answer to Query #364 of A.H.D. of Sept. 14 1930), Miss Annie Boggs of 326 University Ave., Oxford, Miss., wrote "Capt. Andrew Barry married Margaret Katherine Moore about 1767-8. Her sister, Rosa, married Richard Barry, brother to Captain Andrew. Another sister, whose name I do not know, married Charles Hanna, of York County, S.C. Capt. Andrew Barry's daughter, Violet, married James Hanna, of York County--probably a cousin. She may have been twice married--one record gives J. Thomas. Her brothers and sisters were: John, who married Miss Watson; Charles, who married Jane Davitt, Andrew (Major) died 1860; Hughey, who married Malinda Kilgore and moved to Mississippi; Richard, who married Margaret Kilgore & moved to Mississippi; Pol, who married Thomas Lawson; Margaret (Peggy), who married David Thomas; Katy, who married Jesse Crook, and Alice, who married DeForest Allgood.

Captain Barry's wife was a scout in the Revolutionary War, and was flogged by the Tories to make her tell the whereabouts of her husband. She was called the 'Heroine of Cowpens'."
